STICKING TO IT

Professional trainers at gyms have been known to call it "tourist season." It's that time of year when the repentant return to the treadmill and yoga mat in droves, determined to drop that post-holiday bulge.

The difficulty lies in staying committed. But what if you had a little encouragement? A way to chart your progress and keep your motivation going the whole year? For some of you, technology may be the answer, and in this issue, we explore a few local gyms with interesting high-tech offerings designed to keep you on the right path.

Continuing the theme of looking and feeling good, we've also got beauty tips from local gurus and a report on some wellness-focused services at Boston spas. Here's to a healthy 2007!

TRUE CONFESSIONS

I was talking with a friend the other night who's a bartender downtown. He was saying how in all his years in Boston, he's never once known any of the people pictured in the Improper Sightings. We joked that the IMPROPER creates a fictitious fan base and propaganda with completely false representations of Bostonians, then throws it out there to the general public and completely distorts our view of reality. Come on—who's ever seen or known any of these people? Don't get me wrong, it's a completely ingenious way to create a self-fulfilling prophecy of success. On the other hand, it's a little 1984/Big Brother–ish. So, IMPROPER, fact or fiction: Are your pictures poseurs?

—J. MAGGIO
Cambridge

Well, you've caught us. The Improper Sightings are actually digitally forged photos of lifelike animatronic robots that we've had constructed and superimposed onto scenes from around the world. The cost of producing the Sightings represents approximately 99.2 percent of the total editorial budget per year.

UP WITH THE 'BURBS

As a longtime reader and suburban resident, I was ecstatic to see this year's "Suburban Adventures" (Dec. 20). I've lived on both the North and South Shores and was happy to see two of my favorite destinations listed in the article. Crane Beach in Ipswich is not only easily accessible now but also one of the most beautiful, relaxing places in the state. And there's no better end to a day trip than a lobster roll from the Clam Box.

Hot stone cooking

Saag Story

Poor, poor South Enders. You can't swing a hep cat in the 'hood without smacking it into some impossibly chic New American eatery, but even the most gentrified gourmand can't survive on tartare and short ribs alone. The ethnic options? Few and far between. Why, to get a decent dish of lamb saag you'd have to venture north (horrors!) beyond the Columbus Ave. divide, or brave some farther-flung (read: lower-rent) locale. And then you'd have to move your car.

One World Cuisine—the group whose upscale-Indian roster includes Kashmir and Mantra—feels your pain. In response, they've opened Mela (pronounced "MAY-lah") in the space once occupied by Nightingale. As befits a restaurant that counts Hamersley's and Metropolis among its neighbors, the space is hardly a divey eyesore. One World retained the services of Studio Luz to create cozy yet unmistakably urban digs that don't so much scream "modernist bordello" as coyly suggest it. Gauzy fuchsia curtains flirt at the floor-to-ceiling windows, tied back just enough to give passers-by a peek into the dimly lit interior of shiny copper and wood, and provide patrons with prime people-watching advantage.

But the real draw at Mela is the deftly executed Indian food. Yes, you can get your fix of lamb saag (lamb with spinach; $16), or any other traditional fare. While favorites like tandoori chicken ($13), beef vindaloo (spicy beef cubes with potato; $14) and shrimp curry ($19) may set you back a few dollars more here than at your favorite Cambridge hole-in-the-wall, the extra investment buys you the culinary expertise of Mantra chef Anupam Joglekar, who developed Mela's menu and will split his time between the restaurants.

Beyond the usual fare, Joglekar has several swankier dishes, including pistachio-stuffed quail with yogurt gravy and edible goldleaf ($28); mustard-rubbed tandoori lamb ($26); and daal makhni ($15), lentils cooked low-and-slow in butter and spices for 25 hours. Budding chefs should check out the most novel menu option: hot stone cooking. A 500-degree granite slab arrives at the table with uncooked lamb chops ($21), filet mignon ($27) or seafood ($24); a few minutes on either side, and your entrée's good to go. If you'd prefer to leave the cooking to the pros, you can still exercise some control. On a recent evening, Joglekar pronounced a moderately spicy goat curry ($17) "about a 4," though the kitchen can crank it up to 10 on request. "But I don't recommend anything beyond 7," he warns. "Then all you taste is fire." Mela, 578 Tremont St., Boston (617-859-4805). —JH

INNER VIEW

Hunk o' Butter

Romance novel icon, model, actor, creator of the new I Can't Believe It's Not Butter Mediterranean Blend… Fabio is absolutely everywhere these days. The legend rides into town on his new I Can't Believe It's Not Butter truck (crafted in the shape of a Mediterranean island) on Jan. 10 to promote his new butter/olive oil combo. Keep an eye out: He'll be the one striking fear in trans-fat fans citywide.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: Inquiring minds want to know: Who is Fabio?

Fabio: He's down to earth, loves people, has a good sense of humor and never takes himself too seriously.

IB: So if people make fun of you…?

F: I laugh it off. It's just a job.

IB: But you're a romance novel heartthrob! Don't women swoon and mothers weep when they cross your path?

F: Yes, but it's just an image. That's not the real Fabio. I work and then I disappear.

IB: So you're life isn't really a romance novel?

F: Ah, yes—sometimes. But it all depends. I know the difference between true love and infatuation, and I am very selective. I've had just a couple of ladies in my life.

IB: But they were good-looking, right?

F: I only look at their inside beauty. That's more important to me—a beautiful soul. Otherwise, it gets boring.

IB: So is that why you changed your hair back to your natural color?

F: Life is for change, spiritually, mentally… and with hair, too. I could go blue or turquoise one day. Why not?

IB: Have you ever thought of cutting it?

F: Someday; not yet.

IB: As an established top model, what was it like working with the show America's Next Top Model*?*

F: I got to work with beautiful young girls and get paid. Hey, life is a bitch, right? Ah, the irony.

IB: If Fabio were a flavor of ice cream, what would he be?

F: Green Tea. It's healthy.

IB: You're a health nut, so tell us the truth: Are you a margarine or butter person?

F: I am an olive oil/butter person, which is why I pushed I Can't Believe It's Not Butter to make the combo. They listen to me. They are like my family.

TASTY TIDBITS

Fournier Transform

No Starving Artist... Nearly six months after breaking ties with the Metropolitan Club—the upscale steakhouse in Chestnut Hill that he helped open in 2004—chef Jeffrey Fournier is on to his next venture. On Jan. 10, Fournier opens up 51 Lincoln at (you guessed it) 51 Lincoln St. in Newton Highlands. The Contemporary American eatery, located in the space that formerly housed Le Soir, boasts a creative menu with items like watermelon steak (a carryover from Fournier's days at Sophia's) with eggplant chicharrones, and several housemade-liqueur pairings, like hibiscus liqueur with beef short ribs. The décor also displays Fournier's signature style, as the walls are lined with a collection of contemporary abstract paintings created by the man himself. 51 Lincoln St., Newton Highlands (617-965-3100). www.51lincolnnewton.com.

Clockwise from top: The dining room and bar at Lower Depths; chicken "lollipops" at Brownstone; the guys from Deep Ellum Busy as a Bistro... Last spring we announced plans by restaurateurs Jack Bardy, Jennifer Epstein, Bill Keravuori and Darryl Settles to open Beehive, a bistro in the Boston Center for the Arts complex on Tremont Street (next door to Hamersley's). Nearly six months later, the dream is close to becoming reality. "We're doing some major renovations on a very old building, so there's no way to know precisely," says, Bardy, who also owns überhip Pho Republique. "But I think [the opening] should be sometime around late February." The bohemian-style eatery will host nightly live entertainment—including burlesque, cabaret and jazz—and serve up an array of Mediterranean, American and Middle Eastern cuisines. And given the unseasonably warm weather of late, the premium outdoor seating should come in handy.

What Brownstone Can Do for You... Prairie Star, the Back Bay southwestern grill, rode off into the sunset just this fall, but the new tenants wasted little time in unveiling a replacement. The Glynn Company (which also owns the popular hangout next door, Clerys) has opened Brownstone Grill and Bar in the Dartmouth Street digs, serving up simple, reasonably priced fare like the turkey-and-cranberry burger ($8), braised lamb shanks ($17) and pan-roasted haddock ($18). Other perks: a late-night bar menu available until 1:30 am and a drink list featuring creative cocktails like the Brick #1—that's vanilla vodka, blueberry purée and spiced apple. 111 Dartmouth St., Boston (617-867-4142).

Cowboy Up... From deep in the heart of Texas comes Boston's newest restaurant group, Deep Ellum Inc., which this week opened its first local food-and-drink spot, in Allston. The eponymous Deep Ellum—installed in the space formerly occupied by the Reel Bar—offers 22 beers on tap and 100 bottled beers (plus liquor and wine), as well as a menu that specializes in cured meats and sausages. On weekends, Deep Ellum serves up brunch, with options like French toast, fruit fritters, breakfast burritos and a traditional Brazilian breakfast plate. 477 Cambridge St., Allston (617-877-2337).

Franks a Lot... When the Deli Haus closed its Kenmore Square doors a couple years back, it left behind a basement full of memories and a hole in the hearts of the hipsters who haunted the bar. In late December, the space finally found new life as Lower Depths Tap Room, opened by the folks behind local watering holes Bukowski's, the Parish Cafe and Rattlesnake. Like its siblings, the Lower Depths takes its suds very, very seriously. The tap room offers 16 beers on tap and more than 70 by the bottle, and there's a cask on the way. The menu features bar-food staples including hot wings, nachos and fried calamari, plus more-sophisticated entrées like flatiron steak and pork loin. Our favorite item on the menu? That would be the authentic Fenway Frank—soaked in beer and served on a grilled and buttered New England roll—for only a buck. That's more than $3 less than the identical ones over at Fenway. 476 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-266-6662).

FASH FLASH

Strike a Pose

The champagne's all gone and your sparkly dresses are at the cleaners. You've partied like it's 2099 and ingested more calories than a wisp of a girl should. But now you're ready to atone with some serious attention to fitness. Why not pick up a few cute new accessories to make working out a little more fun? Plank, a yoga-accessories outfit run by Boston-based duo Jennifer McKinley and Doreen Hing, was born about 18 months ago when Hing, the design half of the biz, felt visually numbed by the boring aesthetics of her plain old yoga mat. In the midst of a pose, she imagined a sea of chic and funky designs. A few deep breaths later, Plank is a celebrity-adored resource for unique and cheeky accessories. Doreen's personal faves are the Shag and Plank mats. The Shag design features an image of two handprints on so-out-it's-in shag carpet, while the Plank mat shows a digital image of wooden boards with a half-eaten blueberry muffin in one corner. The company also makes bamboo robes and towels and brightly hued canvas carriers and totes. Next up is a line for men. A mat picturing a frosty mug of beer might just inspire? *www.plankdesigns.com. Happy Trails

When that snow finally falls (and you know it will), get out and enjoy it by heading for these cross-country ski and snowshoe trails.

Arnold Arboretum

125 Arborway, Jamaica Plain (617-524-1718). www.arboretum.harvard.edu. Free. Open daily, sunrise to sunset. The oldest public arboretum in the country has four miles of paved trails that loop around land rich with thousands of species of trees and plants—all labeled for your educational convenience.

Blue Hills Reservation

695 Hillside St., Milton (617-698-1802). www.mass.gov/dcr/parks/metroboston/blue.htm. Free. Open daily, dawn to dusk. At this 7,000-acre urban oasis, visitors can ski more than 125 miles of scenic trails, try out the skating pond or take a break and check out the trailside museum.

Depot Park

Great Brook Farm State Park Ski Touring Center

1018 Lowell St., Carlisle (978-369-7486). www.greatbrookski.com. Open Dec. 1-March 20. See Web site for hours and rates. Ten miles of groomed trails take cross-country skiers around meadows, ponds and a working dairy farm. A 1,000-acre park offers night skiing, rentals and a lodge with refreshments.

Walden Pond State Reservation

915 Walden St., Concord (978-369-3254). www.mass.gov/dcr/parks/northeast/wldn.htm. $5, parking fee. Open daily, 8 am-sunset. Thoreau's two-year home, now a National Historic Landmark, offers roughly eight miles of ungroomed trails perfect for exploring with snowshoes.

Weston Ski Track

200 Park Road, Weston (781-891-6575). www.skiboston.com. See Web site for hours and rates. This cross-country ski and snowshoe center grooms more than nine miles of trails (1.2 of which are lighted for night skiing) and offers lessons, ski leagues, rentals and a café—plus, they make their own snow. —Jodie Jordan

IMPROPER SPEAKING

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Om Sweet Om... Your home is your sanctuary—that's the mantra Hanzi and Sumpuran Khalsa live by. And if you prefer a sanctuary with a touch of the exotic, you'll want to check out the Khalsas' new South End store, Devi Home (pronounced "Day-vee"). As world travelers with a passion for Asian textiles, furniture and architecture, they've filled the space with imports from India, China and Tibet. Ottomans, lounges, antique paneled inlays and bed frames, pillows, duvet covers and candles, as well as lamps and statues of Buddha himself, are all hand-picked by the owners, who are also willing to scout for that special piece you need during their next buying trip in March. 1134 Washington St., Boston (617-556-0099).

From the Bangles to Bangles... Used-CD stores aren't what they used to be; e-tail is the way to go now. So says Arthur Jannakas, owner of the iconic local chain CD Spins, who's doing more online sales since he consolidated his business to the Newbury Street store, after selling three of his locations to another owner. He also closed his 19-year-old Winter Street shop; in its place, he and his girlfriend, Lauren Mitchell, have opened CoDA Accessories—a one-stop shop for fashionable jewelry, hats, bags, scarves and belts from around the world, ranging from $4 to $100. You'll have to go to Newbury Street for that Golden Earring bootleg, but you can get a cute pair of gold hoops at CoDA. CoDA Accessories, 58 Winter St., Boston (617-695-2632).

Tiny Bubbles... If you've got the post-holiday blues, why not get a little mood boost at Newbury Street's newest spa and salon? Melt offers manicures, pedicures, facials, cuts, coloring and styling for men and women, as well as hair removal, skin treatments and massage. Luxurious touches like satin robes, champagne with strawberries, and Italian espresso help ensure that you feel pampered. Let the tension melt away as you sip bubbly while someone rubs your toes. 172 Newbury St., Boston (617-262-1116). www.meltboston.com. —LPK

BUYIN' WITH BRIAN

Shopping always goes quicker when you're mortally embarrassed.

I hate shopping. In fact, if and when I end up in hell, I suspect that my personal circle will resemble the men's fitting room at Filene's Basement, where I'll spend eternity sifting through a pile of last year's Ralph Lauren button-downs while a fat, hairy guy in tighty-whiteys invades my personal space as he tries on pair after pair of Dockers. But sooner or later—around Dec. 23—you've got to do your Christmas shopping.

Today my mission is to take care of Heather's gifts. I recruit our friend Brian to help, because I recognize that my own gift-buying priorities could be too heavily influenced by my desire to flee the mall, leaving Heather with a selection of gift cards from the stores closest to the parking garage. Brian, on the other hand, actually enjoys shopping and bantering with salespeople about their products. And he's known Heather longer than I have (in fact, he introduced us), so he can doubtless provide some insight into what she might like. We head to the CambridgeSide Galleria.

Our first stop is a kiosk that sells hair straighteners. Heather wants a good one, and based on how pricey these are, this kiosk should be the place to find it. Knowing nothing about hair straighteners, I adopt the wine-list approach: I'll simply buy the second-least-expensive model. But Brian is already deep in conversation with the sales guy, telling him that the model that cleans your hair is bunk, because it strips your hair of essential natural oils. The wet/dry model is no good either, Brian informs me. "That'll make you look like you've been plugged into an electric socket," he says, gesturing not so subtly toward the spiky-haired kiosk guy. What I want—surprise—is the second-least-expensive model. Brian delivers this verdict with a confident air of authority, as if hair straighteners are his life. Have I mentioned that Brian has a shaved head?

On to Kay Jewelers. For big-ticket stuff, I go to DePrisco, but right now I just need something quick and shiny. I settle on a little diamond pendant; that'll do the trick. I'm not a tough customer. For instance, at a knockoff market in China, I bought a windproof shirt for $40. I knew I got ripped off when the vendor called after me, "You come back again! Bring your whole family!" That's not the kind of thing they say when you're a stone-cold, steely negotiator.

Brian is determined not to let me get ripped off. "These diamonds are salty!" he says, to no one in particular. "Look at how yellow that is! Let's go somewhere else!" Then, to the salesman, "Can I have a loupe? I want to look at these things. They're filled with occlusions." I tell the salesman we don't need a loupe. We're looking for a stocking-stuffer, not the Hope Diamond. "I grew up in the jewelry business," Brian says, "and these stones are awful." This finally draws the attention of the manager, who walks over and says, "Yeah, well, I went to school for this, and I assure you that these stones are comparable to those at any other store." Brian threatens to go to Whitehall Jewelers. Suddenly, $100 comes off the price. By now I'm standing over by the watches, pretending not to be involved. I'm embarrassed by the commotion, but at the same time I'm secretly happy—I certainly never would've gotten any money knocked off. I thought dickering was the kind of thing you only did at a Moroccan bazaar (and, in my case, not even then). After looking at five pendants and as many chains, Brian finds a set that meets his criteria and we're out of there. One store to go.

I THOUGHT DICKERING WAS THE KIND OF THING YOU ONLY DID AT A MOROCCAN BAZAAR (AND, IN MY CASE, NOT EVEN THEN).

We drive over to Newbury Street and hit American Apparel, where I grab a hoodie/sweatpants combo and move to the register. Is this finally a purchase where I won't feel uncomfortable in front of the sales clerk?

The woman ahead of us in line points to a magazine displayed on the counter and asks, "What's up with that?" On the cover is a shirtless man holding a rooster. "That's a guy holding his cock," says the cashier. The woman blushes and exits the store with utmost haste. I can hardly believe that Brian is resisting the urge to say something inappropriate. A split second later, he blurts, "How could she possibly be offended? I love holding cocks!" He gives me a knowing elbow to the ribs and adds, "Isn't that right, sex monster?"

I read somewhere that online shopping increased 43 percent last holiday season. Somehow, I'm not surprised. IB

Patriots Playoff Prognostications

Who won last Sunday's Patriots-Jets game? Our expert says it was the Pats… or the Jets.

Well, the NFL schedule makers have screwed me over yet again. How, you ask? They had the nerve to schedule the Patriots-Jets playoff game for the day before this issue hits the streets, putting me in a horrible situation. How can I write a column about the Pats' latest trip to the playoffs when there's a chance they could be eliminated before anyone even reads it? Answer: I can't. I've decided my best bet is to write two mini-columns that cover all my bases.

Take that, No Fun League.

If the Pats lose…

Coming into this year, it was tough to pinpoint exactly which off-season departure would ultimately hurt the Patriots the most. Would it be Adam Vinatieri? Willie McGinest? How about Deion Branch or David Givens? Turns out it was Eric Mangini. For the second time this season, the Jets coach—and former Pats defensive coordinator—prevailed over his old team, with the latest victory ending New England's season in the most embarrassing of ways: at home, against the J-E-T-S. But as painful as this loss was to swallow, it's nothing compared to the horrifying question we're now forced to consider: Looking ahead to the 2007 season, will the Patriots even be the favorite in their own division?

If they'd taken care of business last week, that mid-November loss to New York would have been written off as a fluke. We'd have chalked it up to bad luck, to the crappy weather, to Logan Mankins' mustache. It could have been anything. But now that the unimaginable has happened, we have to wonder if this Jets victory marks the changing of the guard in the AFC East—a division the Patriots have won five out of the last six seasons.

Yeah, I know. We still have Brady. We still have Belichick (hopefully). The "system" is still in place. But how long before Mangini puts that same system in place with the Jets? If he was able to lead his team—one that's considerably less talented than the Patriots—to two victories over New England in his first season as a head coach, what's it going to be like when he actually figures out what he's doing? What's going to happen when some of New England's top defensive talent grows tired of the Patriots' cat-and-mouse contract negotiations and jumps to reunite with their old coach? How's it going to affect our chances next season when Asante Samuel's wearing green and white?

Am I overreacting to all this? Maybe a little. But of all the losses the Patriots have endured since 2001, this one scares me the most. For the last six years, no matter how bad things got around the team—whether serious injuries, ugly contract disputes or whatever—we've always had the AFC East; it was our trump card, our security blanket. But right now it feels less secure than it has in a long, long time.

If the Pats win…

Hey, Jets fans? It's me, reality. Just wanted to welcome you back.

I've got to admit: You guys were real cute with all the excitement over Mangini Magic and the Jets' big, bad run to the playoffs. But deep down you knew it couldn't last, right? I mean, come on. Your quarterback has a weaker arm than Johnny Damon; your running back's biggest accomplishment of the season was giving everyone the finger on his Topps card; and your head coach is seven years younger than the Patriots' third-string quarterback! You guys were a joke. You were a fluke. You were… well, you were the Jets! And now you're a footnote, just another team of wannabes that fell victim to the Brady/Belichick playoff juggernaut.

YOU GUYS WERE A JOKE. YOU WERE A FLUKE. YOU WERE… WELL, YOU WERE THE JETS!

You're all great fans, and you probably won't forget this Jets season for a while. But the truth is, the rest of the NFL already has; as far as we're concerned, it never happened. But don't feel too bad. You won't be alone. The Chargers or Ravens will be there after next week, and by the time Feb. 4 rolls around and Belichick, drenched in Gatorade and confetti, is being interviewed by Jim Nance at the 50-yard line of Dolphins Stadium, two more teams—and their fan bases—will have met a similar fate (only, they won't have to wake up the next morning on their mother's couch in South Jersey).

Better luck next year. You'll need it. IB

Soroff ON

JOHN SEDGWICK

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Author and journalist John Sedgwick, a member of the illustrious western Massachusetts clan that includes a signer of the Declaration of Independence and Andy Warhol muse Edie, was born in Boston in 1954 and raised in Dedham. A cum laude graduate of the Groton School, he was magna cum laude at Harvard in 1976 and since then has worked as a writer. His nonfiction books include Night Vision: Confessions of Gil Lewis, Private Eye; Rich Kids: Young Heirs and Heiresses: How They Love and Hate Their Money; and The Peaceable Kingdom: A Year in the Life of America's Oldest Zoo. His two novels are The Dark House and The Education of Mrs. Bemis, and he has written for such periodicals as the Atlantic Monthly, Newsweek, GQ, the New York Times and Town & Country. His latest book, In My Blood: Six Generations of Madness and Desire in an American Family, appears this month, detailing the inside lives of some of his illustrious forebears. He is a board member of PEN New England, a trustee of the Massachusetts Foundation for the Humanities and a former chairman of the Associates of the Boston Public Library. Separated from author Megan Marshall, with whom he has two daughters, he lives in Cambridge.

Jonathan Soroff: OK, first of all, how many family members have you pissed off with this book?

John Sedgwick: A few, but not that many have read it yet, so that will change.

Soroff: You expect more to be angry?

Sedgwick: I think more of them will be disappointed in me. This is taking a tack on the Sedgwick family that not all of them will appreciate, going at this whole line of madness and desire. I didn't want to do the standard hagiography of my glorious ancestors, but rather to see them as they actually were and as they actually lived and suffered and dealt with their desires. That's what I was after.

Soroff: How do you plan to smooth things over?

Sedgwick: There will definitely be some fence-mending to do, and I'll be sending them copies of the book with a letter to explain what I was about and hope that they understand. I've already written the letter.

Soroff: What single adjective would you use to describe your family?

Sedgwick: Storied.

Soroff: Have you felt a strong pressure all your life from the weight of all that family history?

Sedgwick: Yes and no. I've certainly always been aware that there was a lot back there, but I never knew precisely what it was, and some of the effort of this book was to try and understand what it was. One of the curiosities of my life is that I've ended up following the sort of standard Sedgwick path without actually knowing too much about who had trod that path before or what experience they had doing it.

Soroff: Like?

Sedgwick: When I got to Groton School, for example, I had no idea that my father's older brother had died there at 18 when he was a senior, or that my Uncle Francis had waged this war on the school and that he sort of led a couple of his sons to suicide because of the way he tormented them.

Soroff: So who was the craziest member of your family?

Sedgwick: I'd say Francis, because it was so contained. He was extremely presentable, yet in his own way demonic, and that discrepancy between appearance and reality makes him the most frightening.

Soroff: So he was abusive?

Sedgwick: Well, he himself had homosexual tendencies, and I think he tried to drive them out of himself and his children. His son Minty was gay and ended up in a mental hospital, where he confessed to his father that he had fallen in love with another man, and my uncle responded, "You are no son of mine." Minty hanged himself shortly after.

Soroff: Favorite family heirloom?

Sedgwick: There was a bench that my father acquired from Seaver Hall [at Harvard]. It was always in our dining room, and it was this long, narrow bench that had been whittled down over generations. It was like Swiss cheese with all the carvings, but at one end of it there was the score of the 1920 Rose Bowl that my father played in and beat Oregon State 7-6. I love it because it's so odd, and because it evokes the accomplishments of my father.

"THIS IS TAKING A TACK ON THE FAMILY NOT ALL OF THEM WILL APPRECIATE. THERE WILL DEFINITELY BE SOME FENCE-MENDING TO DO."

Soroff: Favorite bit of family lore?

Sedgwick: I'd have to say the story of Mumbet, who was a slave of a Sedgwick in Ashley Falls in the western part of the state, where the Sedgwicks are from. She heard the state constitution written by John Adams being read aloud in the Sheffield meeting house. It had the lines about all men being created free and equal, and she wondered if perhaps that didn't apply to her, so she took the matter up with my ancestor Theodore Sedgwick. He freed her, and then she came to work for the family as a free woman and was quite a beloved member of the household. She's buried with the rest of the Sedgwicks in the family graveyard, "The Pie."

Soroff: Most illustrious ancestor?

Sedgwick: I guess nowadays it has to be Edie. She's at her all-time greatest fame, with the movie coming out and two new books. She's iconic.

Soroff: What do you remember about her?

Sedgwick: I remember when she'd come to Sunday lunch. It was normally a tedious affair with cheap Sangria and my father's old chestnuts about Churchill. But he was very protective of her and fond of her. I remember one time in particular when she got bored before dessert and slipped out through the French doors to sunbathe on the lawn half-naked. She was just a blaze of light.

Soroff: Your ancestor general John Sedgwick had some of my favorite last words of all time: "They couldn't hit an elephant at this dist—" just before the Confederates shot and killed him.

Sedgwick: Yeah, he was a very loved figure, known to his troops as Uncle John, and there's a statue of him at West Point. He's not in my book, because he's not in my direct ancestral line.

Soroff: Do you own any Warhols?

Sedgwick: No. I wish I did. What a marvel he was. For somebody as neutral and detached and seemingly uninterested, he had an extraordinary vision and impact. I think he created a lot of celebrity culture, and the whole notion of superstars was largely his creation.

Soroff: Favorite thing about writing?

Sedgwick: Getting it down. Being able to capture something that's true about experience, although it doesn't happen very often.

Soroff: Least favorite?

Sedgwick: The solitude is killing, and the long hours and the difficulty of it.

Soroff: What's harder to write: fiction or fact?

Sedgwick: For me, writing this memoir was harder because there was so much in play: the history, your relationships, other people's feelings, your feelings. There were many more balls in the air. With fiction, you can always get out of a jam by making something up.

Soroff: How much of your identity stems from being named Sedgwick?

Sedgwick: Well, like anyone, it does and it doesn't, but with this book it's come to be much more. I think it intensified my Sedgwick-ness. My Sedgwick-ness is at an all-time high.

Soroff: One thing people assume about you because of your last name?

Sedgwick: That I'm richer than I am. The Sedgwicks have never been money makers. They married well, but they themselves were never industrialists or serious money makers.

Soroff: Last question: If you weren't a Sedgwick, what would you be?

Sedgwick: I think I'd feel a lot freer. There are some expectations and obligations that I feel go along with the name and identity, and I sometimes wish that I didn't have that. IB

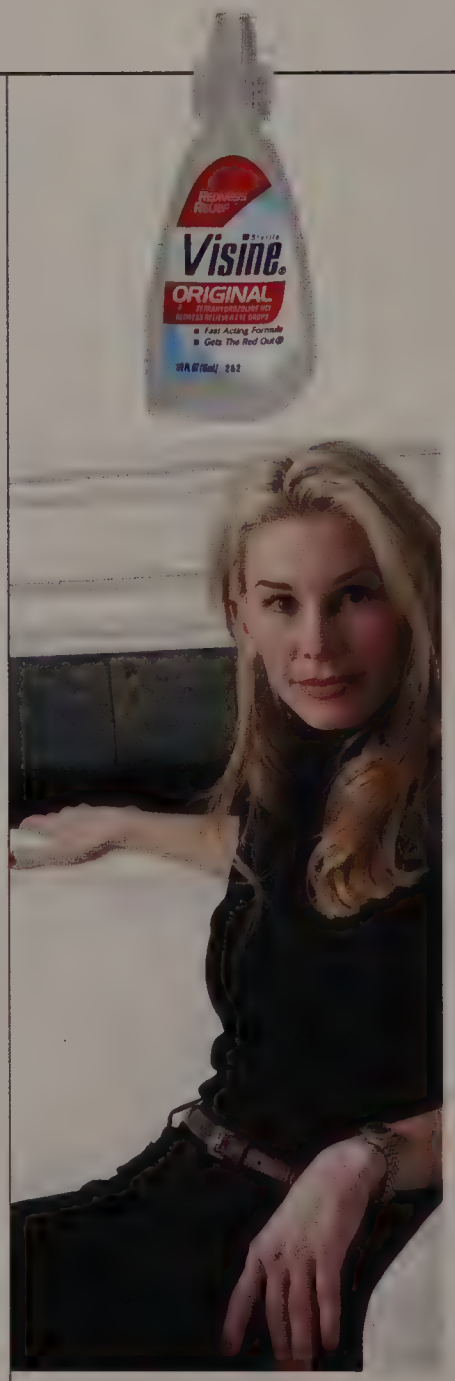
SEXY HAIR

Mario Russo, Owner, Salon Mario Russo



Enough with the straightening. Sexy hair is tousled and touchable—and no, you're not too old. Mario Russo compares this age-defying trend to another, saying, "Tousled hair is like a great pair of jeans: All you need is the right attitude." To achieve this look, you'll need a big, fat curling iron (he uses the Hot Tools Professional Jumbo). First, bend your hair at the root for a lift; then spiral unequal sections of hair around the iron. "Be sloppy," he advises. "It comes out better. You want to look like you've been rolling around in bed." Finish with a texturizing lotion to separate tresses and add moisture. Salon Mario Russo, 9 Newbury St., Boston (617-424-6676). www.mariorusso.com.

FABULOUS BROWS

Julie Michaud, Owner/Creative Director, Michaud Cosmedix

These days, everyone prefers a Brooke brow over a skinny '60s arch. What does brow expert Julie Michaud say? "Groom your eyebrows! Full doesn't mean unkempt. A thick, wild brow only works on gorgeous 17-year-olds. On the rest of us, it's just messy." If you're growing out your brows, she recommends tweezing at the bridge of your nose and near the lower brow bone. Fill in sparse areas with brow powder—one shade darker for blondes, one shade lighter for brunettes. Michaud Cosmedix, 69 Newbury St., Boston (617-262-1607). www.michaudcosmedix.com

BRIGHT EYES

Suzanne Cats, Owner, Lux Lash

Out of cucumbers? Try Visine on ice. Lash lady Suzanne Cats knows a thing or two about keeping eyes tight and bright. She suggests, "Squeeze a few drops in your eyes, then let the excess run off around the eye area. It tightens the skin." Furthermore, Visine sets powder eyeliner. It was a fluke discovery, Cats explains, made when she let Visine pool around her own eyes. "I noticed the black line I made with my angled brush stayed truer throughout the day." So just give your eyeliner a quick dip in the Visine before application, and say goodbye to smears. Lux Lash, 232 Newbury St., Boston (617-587-5274). www.luxlash.com.

SENSATIONAL SKIN

Leila Garczynski, Lead Esthetician, Exhale Mind Body Spa

Although pumpkin and papaya facials are all the rage, Leila Garczynski prefers a mélange of mushrooms. She explains, "While some digestive enzymes, like pumpkin, pineapple and papaya, can burn the skin by penetrating too deeply, smart enzymes, like miaki mushroom, aren't so invasive." A sufferer of roseacea, Lelia swears by Actifirm Mushroom Masks, which contains Mucor miehei mushroom extract. It smooths and hydrates the skin while giving it some oomph. The result? Skin that glows as though you're in love. Exhale, 28 Arlington St., Boston (617-532-7000). www.exhalespa.com.

Itchy, irritated and overgrown? Or simply exhausted and washed out?

Eight Boston beauty experts dish out insider secrets that will keep you drop-dead gorgeous, even in the dead of winter.

PERFECT CURLS

Mindy Cooper, Senior Stylist and Colorist, Carriage House Salon

Although her own locks are stick-straight, Mindy Cooper specializes in taming hair with more than its share of personality. In addition to advising curly-haired clients to deep condition weekly (she recommends Curlisto Deep Therapy Masque), she offers this tip: "When applying shampoo and conditioner, smooth it down the hair shaft. When drying, squeeze water out with a towel—don't rub!" Apparently, scrubbing and rubbing lift up the hair cuticle, making hair drier and harder to control. Yikes! Carriage House Salon, 33 Church St., Cambridge (617-868-7800). www.carriagehousesalon.com.

SWEET FEET

Gretchen Monahan, President, Grettacole

When you own a spa (or three), picking a favorite product can be a challenge. But Gretchen Monahan barely hesitates when she proclaims June Jacobs' Peppermint Foot Therapy her favorite new find. "I love this as a treat for the feet both in the spa and at home," says Monahan, who soaks and slathers her tootsies every night before bed. As for pedicures, she gets one every two weeks, year-round. (Her current color: Lippmann's Dark Side of the Moon. We just had to ask!) Grettacole, 10 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-266-6166). www.grettacole.com.

A DAZZLING SMILE

Dr. Thomas Connelly, Cosmetic Dentist

For Bostonians who crave a Hollywood-caliber smile, Dr. Tom Connelly's your go-to guy. He recommends the newest in porcelain veneers: the JK Veneer by Jason Kim of Oral Design New York. Kim produces his veneers from a blend of porcelain powders he concocts in his own lab. Connelly notes, "Unlike most veneers, which create an artificially white effect, Kim's veneers mimic the reflection of light off natural tooth enamel." That would certainly explain what he's grinning about… Dr. Thomas Connelly, 29 Comm. Ave., Suite 310, Boston (617-536-9057).

LUSCIOUS LASHES

Rebecca Pimentel, Owner, The Beauty Mark

So you crave exaggerated eyelashes, but can't spare the time (or cost) for extensions? Rebecca Pimentel adores Fast Lash, bits of white polyester fibers that resemble snowflakes. We were skeptical of their magical properties, so Rebecca offered a demonstration. First she whisked on a coat of mascara, then the Fast Lash (the flakes stuck easily), followed by more mascara. Sure enough, it was as though she'd sprouted a pair of falsies (on her lashes)! Lastly, she reminds, "Don't forget to wipe your mascara wand before returning it to the tube, lest you get clumps." The Beauty Mark, 33 Charles St., Boston, 617-720-1555. www.thebeautymark.com. IB

THE healing TOUCH

With services and treatments that go beyond skin-deep, day spas aren't just about getting pretty anymore.

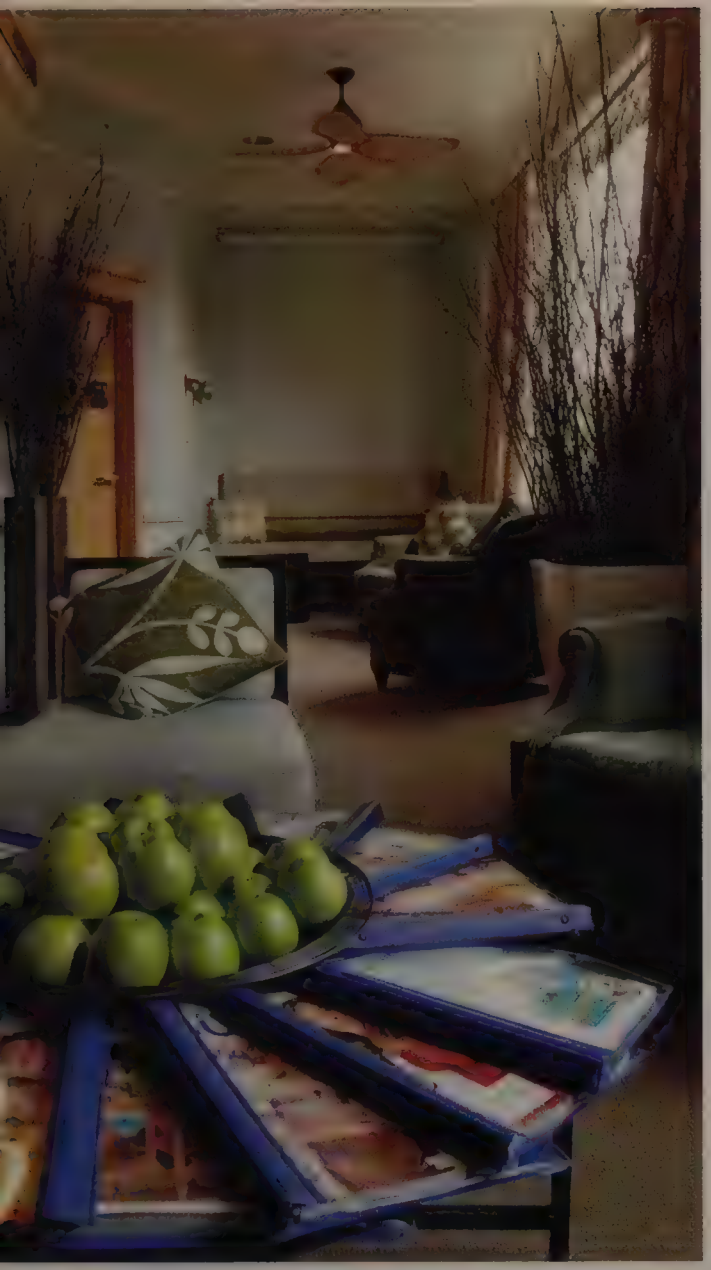
BY SEETHA NARAYAN PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANDREA FISCHMAN

hen the aesthetician giving you a facial speaks soothingly about lymphatic drainage, you know something's changed at your local high-end spa. The Vinyasa-flow yoga class next door confirms it: It's no longer just a beauty spa, but a transformation center. You can walk in drab and stressed, and leave with expert advice and lifestyle improvements, besides feeling like a million bucks. All it takes is a willingness to spend said million—or at least a few hundred—and commit the time. Many Bostonians find it a worthy investment, and holistic spas are thriving. To explore their offerings, we picked five and surrendered our aches and pains to their pampering, ah, healing hands.

Energy work

Five-storied Emerge on Newbury Street, inaugurated in 2006, is a luxury water-therapy spa. Besides a full menu of salon and beauty treatments, there's a "hydrostorm shower" with aromatherapy, steam, oxygen and color; a "hydrotherapy tub" with infused baths, color, aroma and massage; "Vichy showers" whose nine showerheads release steam and water; and various "Kur rituals" combining baths, massages and wraps.

The luxury continues at Emerge's rooftop garden, fireside lounge, juice-and-tea bar, VIP lounge with whirlpool tub and treatment rooms, and even in an area specially designated for men.



As for services, Emerge's alternative therapies include reiki, reflexology, ear candling and craniosacral therapy. Why the focus on wellness? "After Sept. 11," says publicist Rosanne Mercer, "[people] became aware of how fragile life may be. We live under more stress, and [are] more dedicated to taking care of ourselves." So, says Mercer, demand for wellness services increased. Emerge's prices are on the high side, but clients are "more discriminating and want to be pampered," she says.

I sign up for craniosacral therapy, and therapist Patty Sweeney explains that it's energy work involving contact in "areas of restriction or blockage." Sweeney says she uses her energy and intuition to release the client's energy blocks. "It's [my] intention to provide healing, not take on someone else's energy," she says. "I'm working in conjunction with the client's body."

It sounds nebulous, but mid-treatment, with Sweeney's hands resting on my diaphragm, something unexpected happens. I become aware of people I'm angry with, and, to my astonishment, they are legion: roommates, colleagues and petty offenders from ancient times who aroused wrath I never expressed, and apparently still hold. If not exactly relaxing, it's illuminating. "Sometimes [craniosacral therapy] allows recognition of held energies," Sweeney notes sweetly. Indeed.

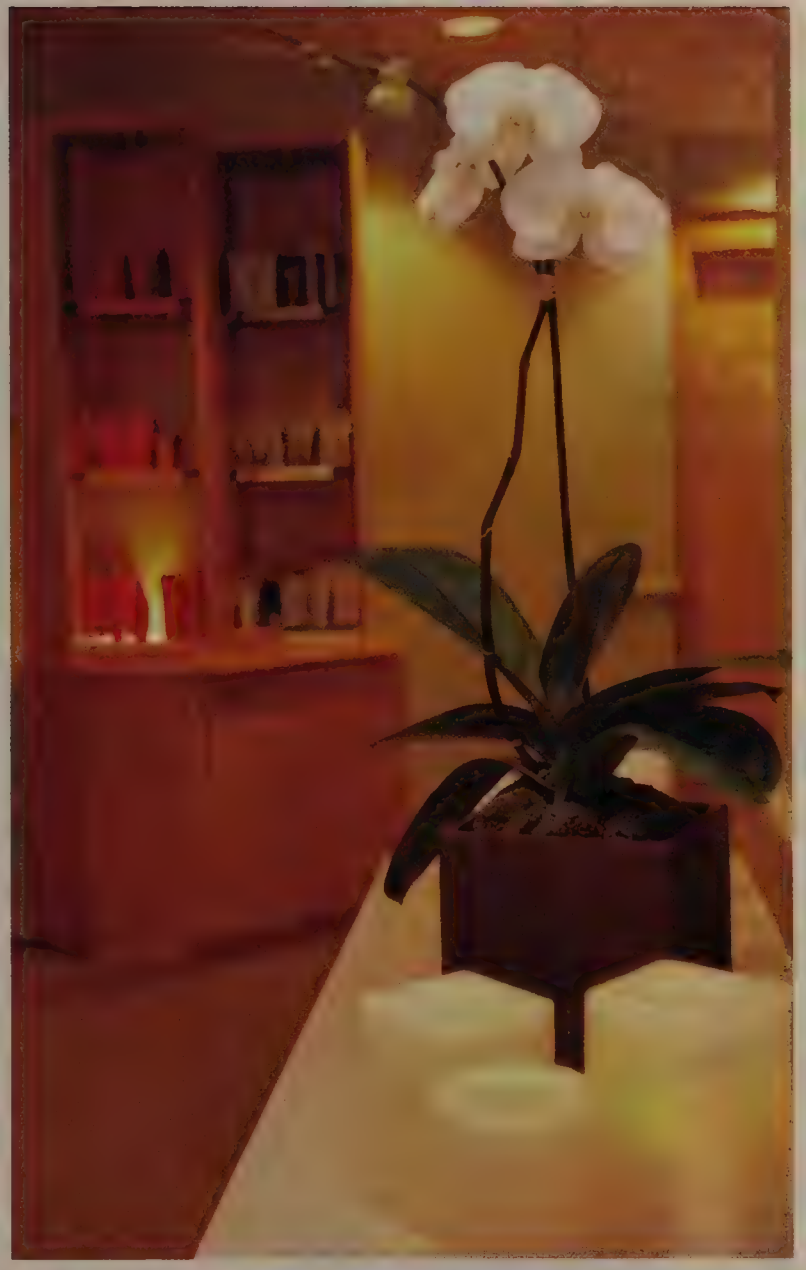
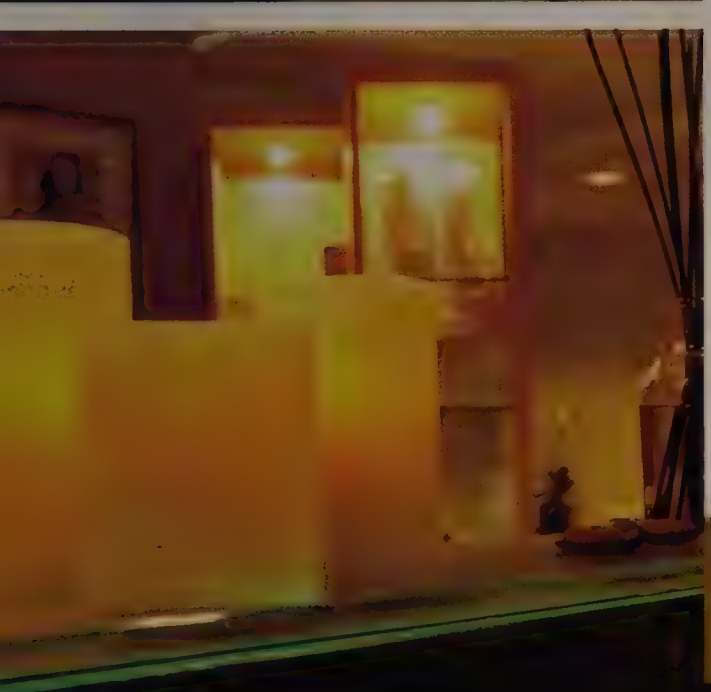
Quick results with a touch

At Bella Santé Spa on Newbury Street, therapy begins in the luxurious locker area with its steam room, showers and abundant space. You shrug off clothes, get into a robe and slippers, leave the day behind and plunge into the experience.

The soothing aqua-and-cream relaxation area with water-inspired décor invites lounging. Two jugs of ocean-mineral water with fruit slices sit on the counter. Paul Mazur, vice president of human resources, enthuses about its contents until he has me believing it's working subtle magic within me as I sip and await my masseur.



Bella Santé is mainly a beauty spa, whose foray into health involves massage. The small space is luxurious, and priced accordingly.



Brian Sweetser, corporate educator, has eight years' worth of massage training and a fourth-degree black belt in Kempo karate. "In Japanese tradition, most martial artists are healers," he notes. His expertise covers shiatsu, hot rock, acupressure and "aromavedic" massage, which incorporates client-chosen colors and aromas.

Will Bella Santé expand into holistic care? Customers want results faster than a holistic approach allows, Mazur says, so Bella Santé calibrates its offerings accordingly. "People want to relax, even if they have a deeper muscle issue that needs to be worked out," agrees Sweetser. "The trick is to find a way to do both. You have to work so that they can feel [results] without jumping off the table."

My massage leaves me limp and happy. Sweetser uses a combination of techniques and ends with cold gel on my legs to promote circulation—ideal, he says, for those who work on their feet. Afterwards, I amble back to the locker room with an excuse for a hot shower with creamy products.

Bella Santé, 38 Newbury St., Boston (617-424-9930); 76 Bedford St., Lexington (781-862-2444). www.bellasante.com.

Best known for its luxurious beauty services, Bella Santé also offers a variety of healthful massage treatments

Ayurveda, needles and health

The Belgian city of Spa gained fame for its iron-rich waters which, when ingested, cured iron-deficiency-related ailments. Later, "spa" became a term for any setting offering internal and external water therapies. But today's spa needn't involve water: If it offers services beyond beauty, as Saffron in Concord does, it's a spa.

"I want it to be a warm, welcoming place," says owner Judy Lyon, who opened Saffron in 2005. The burgundy-and-cream décor and friendly staff give it a cheerful yet luxurious atmosphere.

Saffron is mainly a beauty spa, but Lyon's interest in "inner and outer beauty" prompted her to add massage therapist Jen Waters and acupuncturist Marlena Szitanko to her staff. The prices are reasonable—hence part of Saffron's allure.

The loft where Waters and Szitanko do their stuff is quiet and soothing. Waters offers deep-tissue, Swedish and Ayurvedic massage involving steam and hot oils.

The acupuncture room has candles, a heat lamp and Szitanko, who radiates calm. Before the treatment begins, Szintako asks composedly about everything from medical history to bowel movements. Such is Eastern medicine.

Then I'm on my back, with sterilized needles in my feet, calves, wrists and forehead. They go in like butter except in the calf, which gets sore. "That's good," said Szitanko. "It's probably an area where energy needs to move." The idea is to address meridians where "chi" energy is blocked—in my case, meridians to do with sleep and hormonal balance. After 20 minutes, she removes the pins, has me turn over and repeats the process. By treatment's end, I'm asleep.

We chat about Chinese acupuncture and its mystique. Clients come in with issues like depression, carpal tunnel, infertility, headaches, migraines, back pain and neuropathy. Over time, says Szitanko, they get better.

The treatment is soothing. I stay awake that night but don't get bored. On subsequent nights, I sleep well. Ms. Lyon's loft has good things.

A spa for well-being

Étant, on Tremont Street, is the rare reasonably priced spa that focuses almost exclusively on health. "We don't do hair, nails, cellulite, weight-loss body wraps, temporary fixes," says founder Scott St. Cyr, who started Étant a decade ago and whose clients are now mostly regulars. "I wanted a place where people could focus on maintaining health." Étant offers massage, acupuncture, polarity therapy, body treatments, and—in a latter-day concession to beauty—facials and waxing. The atmosphere is nurturing.

Flyura Bernstein, the acupuncturist, is a delight, thrilled by her work and its benefits to clients. "Your lungs are dry," she observes. "Your liver is suppressed." And, she wants to know, do I express my emotions? "It's good for you to do that," she notes, since holding them in would exacerbate depressed organs.

Bernstein infuses energy into everything she touches. "It's beautiful, isn't it?" she asks with a smile as she shoves a needle into my scalp and explains about chi, which she is unblocking in meridians that involve my respiratory system, among others.

St. Cyr demonstrates polarity therapy. "We're working with five elements—earth, water, fire, air and ether," he says. "If you have a headache, I move that heat from your head to your feet. If [we] balance it out your feet aren't going to hurt." But I'm in such good shape after acupuncture that St. Cyr encounters little to work on. His massage feels great, though: St. Cyr has gifted hands.

Étant's no-frills approach attracts a diverse clientele, says St. Cyr, including a population traditionally underrepresented at spas: men. Since I see more men arriving for appointments than I've ever seen at a spa, I believe it.

East meets West

Exhale, on Arlington Street, seamlessly combines the austere East with the luxurious West: yoga and spa, zen and heated neck pillows, workouts and pampering. Stone statues of the Buddha are displayed throughout an opulent space of rich wood floors and bamboo-and-green décor. Besides massage, facials, acupuncture and full-body treatments, Exhale offers access to yoga and core fusion classes in its beautiful studios, as well as one-to-six-week lifestyle workshops. Prices are on the high end, but they deliver solid value.

Exhale's concept is wellness in an upscale setting. Why? "I believe in what the destination spa has done," says CEO Annbeth Eschbach. "There's an increasing desire to find more peace and space in our lives. On the street, there are sirens. You're walking around with a Blackberry and a phone. There isn't any sacred place to go to nurture you. We created a new concept to fill a market void." Eschbach started Exhale in 2003 in Manhattan, and it now has branches in several cities.

My experience starts with a Vinyasa-flow yoga class, set to music compiled by rubber-boned instructor Amy Leydon, whose students match her convolutions. Then follows a facial with aesthetician Leila Garczynski, who turns out to have a medical background and treats my face to green papaya, tea-tree oil and seaweed while educating me about skin. Finally, I have an hour-long consultation with dietician Lucy Turnbull, who tells me how to ensure my vegetarian diet is well-rounded. My workout, pampering and education leave me feeling good. It seems time well spent.

"Our responsibility is to expose people to new experiences," says Eschbach, noting that people who feel nervous about making lifestyle shifts are more open to it in a "groovy atmosphere." The statement may well sum up where the spa industry is headed. IB

IT HURTS TO BE BEAUTIFUL

YOU LIKE WHAT YOU SEE, BUT HOW DOES SHE DO IT? PREPARE FOR THE SORDID TRUTH, BOYS.

BY G&R ILLUSTRATION BY JANICE NADEAU

Naughty, naughty boy! We caught you gaping—taking that mental picture and manipulating it in your mind in all sorts of unsavory ways. Well, put that tongue back in your mouth (drool is so unappealing on a man) and check out of lala-land for just a moment, please. She may seem like a pristine goddess, a natural beauty who just rolled out of bed looking like the Fantasy Girl of Your Dreams. But the reality? Not nearly so effortless.

At the risk of violating the Sisterhood's most sacred pact, we're going to strip bare a few of your favorite fantasy women (taken from our own informal survey of local men), to reveal the excruciating bouts of primping and crimping that go on behind the scenes before they deign to show those exquisite faces and bodies to the world at large. So snuggle up to G&R to learn how much it hurts the bod (not to mention the wallet) to be oh so "naturally" beautiful.

The Girl Next Door

The Fantasy:

Looking through the steam rising from your double latte, you catch the flip of her pleated tartan skirt as she dashes past the coffee shop window. Time stands still. The curl of her long, full hair, her perfectly pouty lips, the radiant glow of her skin, the shiny loafers that might just possibly reflect what's… slap! Get back to that latte, Mister!

The Reality:

Her nubile, baby-soft skin is achieved using myriad products and regimens: facials, sugar scrubs and chemical peels, or more extreme measures like laser treatments ($800–$1,200 each of the three recommended times, which incidentally turn her skin the hue of Smurfette for up to four days before her transformation into Snow White); high-end moisturizers and products such as retinols, glycolics and special "broths"; and a veritable buffet of products containing cucumber, grape seed and pomegranate to maintain that fresh and youthful look ($75–$375).

Her face is framed by long, luscious locks of natural curls—natural except for the cut and color, possible perm and basketful of products (totalling $600) to maintain that magnificent mane.

Those luscious lips may come courtesy of one of the beauty industry's latest inventions: a lip plumper ($15–$50) that irritates lips to rosy fullness. Finishing touches include liner, lipstick and gloss ($20–$120). And the dazzling smile could be thanks to braces ($5,000 and up), veneers, caps ($1,200 and up each), whitening ($500 and up for professional treatment) and proper oral hygiene, including professional cleaning at least twice per year ($190 and up).

Daisy Duke

The Fantasy:

You're strolling through the produce section of the supermarket in search of some fresh fruit, when you spot a Daisy Duke look-alike in her ultrashort shorts and teeny, tiny, tight-fitting tee. You reach for one of the perfectly stacked melons—in the display bin, silly!—to ensure that it's ripe, as Daisy's lacey undergarments peek out from those low-rise shorts. Doesn't she look bodacious?

The Reality:

Ta-ta, my friend, if you think every pair of those succulent honeydews is organically grown! That fabulous figure doesn't come without a price—be it intense physical training ($55–$90 an hour) or a little boost from plastic surgery ($2,000–$6,000 per breast)—not to mention a strict diet. You can forget about enticing her to indulge in some barbecue or Southern fried chicken with you: That's why you've spotted her in the produce section. And some Daisys go even further through liposuction (starting at $2,500 per body part—and the bigger the part, the higher the price tag).

To prepare for the role of Daisy in The Dukes of Hazzard, Jessica Simpson said that in order to squeeze into those famous Dukes she worked out for 253 days straight, two and a half hours a day, and followed a rigorous diet of plain chicken and vegetables. Talk about pain and sacrifice!

Daisy's seemingly never-ending silky legs were shaped by intense squats; denuded by electrifying (feels like electrocuting) laser hair removal ($2,200–$7,000); and polished by rubbing, scrubbing, exfoliating and spray tanning ($30–$80).

And how does one get that big-haired, Southern beauty look? Hot curlers ($50), hair spray ($4–$26), teasing comb/pick ($4), and makeup—lots of makeup, whether from a drugstore ($60) or high-end department stores ($600).

Boardroom Babe

The Fantasy:

You patiently wait at the conference table for the new VP. She arrives, conversation stops and all heads turn. She leans over in her über-fitted Italian skirt suit, revealing just a glimpse of the black lace bustier underneath as she opens her supple leather briefcase filled with everything a working girl needs to get down to business. She takes out her notes and confidently presents the latest revenue figures; the numbers are on the rise, and so are you. You envision pulling those hairpins out of her tightly spun bun to liberate flowing tresses, and whipping off those designer spectacles to uncover gorgeous, sultry eyes.

The Reality:

You're trumped and you're fired—because she's the boss, and you can't afford her anyway! Her beauty tab runs about $1,100, and that doesn't include some of your favorite things, such as the fishnets ($7–$48) and French lace bustier ($450).

That hair took at least three hours at the hairdresser's to be properly highlighted, cut, blown and styled ($125–$300 plus tip).

The right look in her eyes required anywhere from one to seven applications of makeup ($40–$300). And don't forget that she needs her eyebrows waxed ($20–$80) to achieve the perfectly "interested" arch—perhaps aided by Botox ($500–$700 per vial)—and designer glasses ($350 and up) that make it easier for her to see every inch of you. Collagen, Restylane or silicone injections ($450 and up), and perhaps even permanent liner and color courtesy of cosmetic tattooing ($300 and up), help keep those lips lovely and that smile mysterious.

Under her fishnet stockings she's smooth to the touch, with a secret garden that's so perfectly groomed ($40–$80), it could rival those seen on the chicest beaches of Brazil. If she visited her gardener that day, she's going commando—but you're not getting any that night. Why? She's just undergone an hour of excruciating pain from hot wax being applied and swiftly removed from a very sensitive area. Need we say more?

* * * * * * * *

Now that you know the physical and financial pain women endure to look their best, don't be put off if you ask her out at the last minute and she says no. She may not be forcing you to play by "the Rules"—she's simply daunted by her limited prep time. We do know a few battle-savvy, prepared-for-anything females, however, who can get prepped in an hour and a half, by retreating to the situation room (where the beauty cabinet awaits) and declaring a DEFCON alert.

If you happen to arrive at her place and she's not ready, listen to hottie hair stylist James Peltier (Salon Fontana): "Every guy should take a lesson in blowing. If she's not ready when you are, help a gal out a little; grab the drier and do her (hair, that is). It won't just earn you lots of points; it can be very sensuous."

With all of that said, it's important to remember that beauty is in the eye of the beholder. Be sure you tell her how truly beautiful she is and how much you appreciate her efforts. Trust us on this, boys. Do what we say and you'll find yourself with that coveted ticket down to Brazil in no time. iB

When it comes to presentation, men need a little help too

*If she tells you, "You look fine," she's fibbing. "Fine" is a four-letter word.

*A baseball cap has no place on a date—unless you're taking her to a sporting event in which you're participating. (Ideally a home game at Fenway.)

*If your hair is properly cut and shaped, you won't need that cap. Note: no comb-overs, please. If it's sparse, either shave it all off or be a man and join the Hair Club.

*Michael Perry, general manager at two of Newbury Street's hottest hair salons, offers these quick tips for your coif:

- Avoid shampooing your hair every day to avoid the "fuzzies."
- Be metro and use conditioner daily.
- Apply product sparingly when your hair is slightly damp to avoid looking like you just stepped off the Sopranos set.
- Visit your stylist between haircuts for free five-minute cleanups.

*Shave! And this rule is no longer limited to the face. Remember that you have a secret garden, too. Stubble anywhere is a no-no.

*It's time to upgrade your shower products. Banish those harsh green bar soaps that smell like a combination of bug spray and household cleanser. After all, humans respond to scent. If you're really lucky, she might even jump in and wash your back.

*A little moisturizer goes a long way. We like you smooth everywhere our skin might come in contact with yours.

*Deodorant/antiperspirant: Apply liberally. Cologne: Use sparingly.

*If you've got a hairy back, we have three words for you: It. Must. Go.

*You like her nails to be properly presented. Why not do the same for yours? Better yet, take her and yourself out for a mani-pedi spa treat. The benefits will surprise you, and soft hands mean your date is much more likely to end happily.

*First conversation, first kiss, first base; want any of it? There's nothing worse than halitosis or teeth discolored from smoking or coffee. Do as mother taught you: Brush and floss often, and don't forget to rinse with mouthwash. And while we're on the topic, may we suggest bleaching? In this age of advanced dental technology, every man can have a sexy smile. "Men don't realize that regular visits to the dentist not only help their dental and overall health, but also boost their attraction factor with women. In my practice we've found that men wait far too long between visits, resulting in bad breath, cavities and stained teeth, which makes them look older." So says dental guru Dr. Shirin Shahriar of Newton Dental Group. Heed her words, and know this: No one is going to tell you you have bad breath (they'll simply avoid you), so it's up to you to prevent it.

*Snoring is bad. When you're up all night, it's usually a good thing. When we're up, it just means we're awake! This isn't all about us, though—after all, don't you need your beauty sleep, too? Besides, snoring can be a health matter. Board-certified sleep expert Dr. Kelly A. Carden says: "Most of the time, snoring has no serious consequences (except to relationships). However, people who snore are more likely to have a serious sleep condition, like obstructive sleep apnea (OSA)." Here are a few of Carden's tips:

- Avoid sleeping on your back.
- Be aware that alcohol, sedatives, some sleeping pills and medicines relax the muscles of the throat, thus making snoring worse.
- Lose those unwanted pounds; weight loss can often reduce snoring considerably.

If these measures aren't enough, your doctor will help you decide which treatment is best for you.

*On being fit: You don't like it when she bulges in inappropriate places. She doesn't like it on you, either. And there's a recently discovered incentive for men to get into shape. Dr. Mehmet Oz, vice chair of surgery and professor of cardiac surgery at Columbia University (and one of Oprah's favorite medical gurus), recently made this startling statement: "For every 35 pounds a man loses, he gains an inch." Yes, that inch.

Can new technology make this the year you actually achieve those fitness goals?

BY LESLIE P. KILGORE PHOTOGRAPHS BY REBECCA BOUSQUET

Do you lament the failed fitness resolutions of new years past? I know I do. Like so many, I set out each year to tighten, tone and shape my body from a tent into a temple: I vow to do more weight training, take more spinning classes, load up on the veggies, skip the sweets. But when I reach a familiar plateau—when the scale refuses to budge or I don't see results quickly enough—I tend to get discouraged and slack off.

If the above sounds familiar, take a different tack this year. Whether you're a regular at the gym or haven't set foot in one since PE class, there are new ways to measure your health and fitness that just might help you keep at it. Technology has made it easier to track your progress through computerized programs that can target personal goals. Here are some of the Boston health clubs that are putting it to good use.

Body Map at Focus Fitness

Whether you're preparing to run a marathon, recovering from an injury or simply returning to the gym after a long absence, Focus Fitness has a tool to help you train or rehabilitate correctly.

Using the Body Map program developed by the National Academy of Sports Medicine, one of the gym's trainers photographs you in a series of poses, and a computer program processes the digital images, producing an assessment of your neuromuscular efficiency, functional strength and flexibility. The photos will show, for example, whether you're less flexible in one hip or lack strength in one leg. Using that information, the center's fitness and conditioning specialists, who boast backgrounds in anatomy, biology, physiology and biomechanics, come up with an individualized program that puts you on the path to recovery—or that ripped body you've been dreaming about. A former Olympian, Focus Fitness owner and founder Peter Donahue knows what he's doing. And take it from one who's experienced it: Nothing will motivate you to train like seeing a backside shot of yourself in a squatting position!

LEAN at Healthworks

Motivation, accountability, guidance and consistency—that's the mantra of Healthworks' LEAN (short for Lifestyle, Education And Nutrition), a lifestyle-management program that teaches healthy habits. During an initial assessment, a LEAN coach calculates your weight, frame size, body mass index and waist circumference, as well as your RMR, or resting metabolic rate (how many calories you burn when doing nothing). Armed with that information and some guidance from your LEAN coach on how to use the gym's BalanceLog software by HealtheTech, you're ready to go.

LEAN creates a personalized plan based on your metabolism to ensure healthy weight loss. You take the software home, download it to your PC and record what you eat each day in the food log, and the software calculates the calories you've ingested; if you exceed your daily budget, you know how much you need to burn off at the gym. It's up to you to record your progress each day, but Healthworks offers support in the form of weekly check-ins and e-mail sessions with a LEAN coach, weekly group meetings and weigh-ins, and one-on-one training.

Clearly, personal accountability is the key to LEAN's effectiveness. "If you have to write down that you ate a pint of Ben and Jerry's, chances are you won't eat it," says LEAN coach Shauna MacCaffrie. But she admits it takes commitment to record everything you eat and all your physical activity every day. "There's a level of independence and self-motivation with this system," MacCaffrie says. "But for clients who stick with it, the results are eye-opening."

Lifelong dieter Nan Coellner, for example, has lost 20 pounds on the program since last March and claims it's top: Shauna MacCaffrie calculates Lauren Brown's resting metabolic rate at Healthworks. bottom: Onetime fitness competitor Mike D'Angelo codeveloped Body Evolver's Body Check program.

the only thing that's really worked for her. "Knowing your own RMR gives you a baseline for the number of calories you need," Coellner says. "That, with the guidance my coach gives me, allows for healthy weight loss without tricks and gimmicks," she says. "It's changed my life. I tell Shauna that we'll be growing old together."

441 Stuart St., Boston (617-859-7700). www.healthworksfitness.org. $99 for initial assessment; additional fees for training sessions and group programs. Membership at Healthworks not required.

Body Check at Body Evolver

Former fitness competitor Mike D'Angelo and computer geek Joe McMahon (a former client of D'Angelo's) opened their Back Bay training center with technology in mind. The program they've developed, called Body Check, is available to any member who signs up for personal training.

After an initial assessment to calculate your body mass index, body-fat percentage, muscle density and waist-to-hip ratio (through a skin fold and circumference measurement), you get a print-out detailing your total body composition. The report includes your weight, base metabolic rate, fat mass, lean mass and any health risks you should be aware of. A chart shows you the ideal numbers for your body type and how far you need to go to get there. Then a trainer helps you map out a personal fitness plan and a daily caloric adjustment with goals to suit your preferred pace.

"It's a holistic approach to fitness," D'Angelo says. "It maps out reality in a way people haven't seen before, but in a judgment-free environment, which is key."

I'll admit that having an ex–fitness competitor measure folds of skin from my gut, arms and thighs is intimidating, but the overview and assessment aren't. It's encouraging to see that health isn't just about being skinny, and that healthy goals are attainable with simple changes in habits and a little guidance from an expert. This program can really deliver a boost in self-esteem, as well as some expert support and motivation.

364 Boylston St., Boston (617-247-2639). www.bodyevolvercenter.com. $39–$49, monthly membership; $60–$125 for training, which comes with a Body Check assessment.

BodyView at Equilibrium Fitness and Spa

In the class of couture health clubs, Equilibrium is swanky and squeaky-clean, catering to busy business types seeking ultraefficient workouts. The club's Wellness Plan, a one-month fitness program offered to all new members for free, includes a body assessment, a nutrition guide, a workout plan and training sessions, plus a spa treatment.

The first step in the Wellness Plan is to get a BodyView map from the BodyGem, a probe-like apparatus that uses ultrasound waves to measure the thickness of the fat in seven places on your body. Armed with that info, the computer determines your body type and spits out a computer-generated image, sort of a cyberspace version of you. After you sit down with a trainer to set goals for dropping weight and body-fat percentage, the program provides another image—only this one projects what you'd look like after meeting those goals. It's not entirely accurate, but it is motivating—as is knowing how thick your fat is!

Now you're ready for the smart-card system that runs on most of the gym's equipment. With some initial guidance and a fitness plan from a personal trainer, you swipe your card and enter some personal info and goals on the machine's screen, and it records your workout for that day. Over time, all of the miles you've walked or run, calories you've burned, and reps and sets you've completed are tallied on the machines, so it's easy to keep track of your progress. And even after you reach the end of your one-month Wellness Plan, the smart card continues to store your information, so you can add new goals on your own.

50 Congress St., Boston (617-228-5136). www.theeq.com. Please call for membership and training prices.

Apex and Fitness Advisor at the Boston Athletic Club

To go with the BAC's enormous facility—equipped with swimming pools, courts for basketball, racketball, tennis and squash, a workout center and a bar and grill—fitness director Ron Merryman has selected some well-designed, computer-based fitness programs. One is Apex, affiliated with the National Academy of Sports Medicine. Using Apex, trainers and clients work together to create a diet and fitness routine, and the trainer then leads the client through the plan over a set period of time. You record your workouts and what you've been eating on your computer at home, and your trainer accesses your log to monitor you and provide guidance.

While working out, members can also access the center's Fitness Advisor program. It's hooked up to most of the Nautilus equipment and cardio machines (you log into machines with a pin number), and members can use a computer kiosk to access their records. What stands out about the program is the guidance it offers as you use each machine: It tells you when your reps are too fast or too slow, and whether you need to raise or lower the weight to ensure maximum efficiency, as well as how intense your cardio workouts should be. It's like having a no-B.S. trainer by your side telling you right from wrong.

"Our programs don't allow you to cheat yourself," Merryman says. "And that's most important when working out and eating right, for anyone. There's a right and wrong way to work out and technology is now helping us see that." IB

SERENDIPITOUS SHOPPING: OUR UNFETTERED CORRESPONDENT SEEKS OUT THE SALUBRIOUS AND THE CEREBRAL.

INVOLUNTARY SERVITUDE, RIGHT NOW

Enslaved: True Stories of Modern Day Slavery* is edited by the Boston area's Jesse Sage and Liora Kasten, with a foreword by Gloria Steinem. To invite a slavery survivor for a speaking engagement, call 800-884-0719.

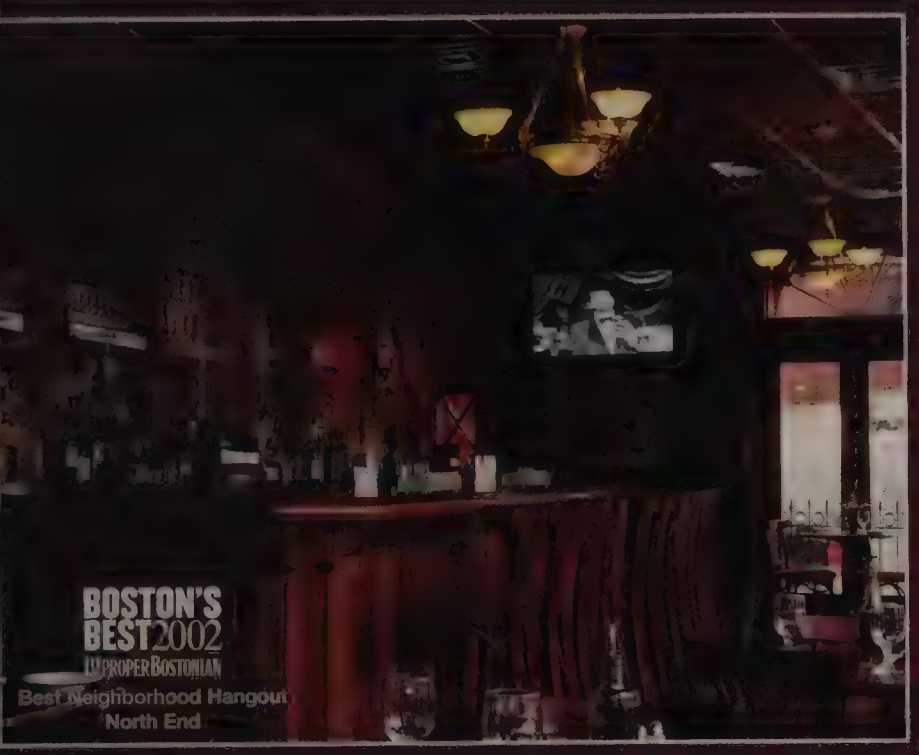
The horrific concept of slavery is alive around the world—in many forms. Among the disturbing narratives in this book is the story of a Haitian orphan, "saved" from abandonment in the woods by frightening cousins, then sent to Connecticut—yes, that Connecticut—where another sadistic woman holds her a virtual prisoner, extracting brutally demanding labor without pay. Rapes and stabbings are common, as is passport theft, which strands the victim in the victimizer's lair. Inadequate food and inhuman lodgings appear in every story. One man is arrested without explanation and spends 19 years toiling in a Chinese labor camp, subsisting on food substitutes that produce appalling digestive problems. A teen prostitute, treated violently in Belarus, services 24 clients in as many hours. These terrible stories, luckily, evolve into some salvation. The final narrative, by a Mauritanian man whose Arab family actually own slaves, recounts his enormous turnaround after reading in the French constitution the news-to-him news: "Men are born free." This life-changing information is received as "amazing grace," and he proceeds to free his own personal slave, with whom he already has a fascinating relationship of some mutuality, worthy of a novel. The survivors have become prophets of hope out of horror.

TAKE ME OUT TO THE SHRINE

Fenway Park Tours ($12) take place every hour from 9 am to 4 pm, seven days a week, departing from the souvenir store on Yawkey Way. Call 617-236-6666 for information.

There's something mythically throbbing about going to Fenway Park when no players, no screaming fans and no hotdogs are present. You own the place, as if visiting some ancient, sacred Grecian spot whose gods are elsewhere. The tour takes you way up, offering a huge view of Boston while also overlooking the full, empty ball field spread out before you, rippling with plastic. We learn about the Green Monster's soothing paint, no longer available for purchase, and about the pre-Monster days, when neighbors watched the game from nearby rooftops. The wood on the enormous bar is recycled from bowling alley flooring. Fenway's opening in April 1912 was trumped by another enormous headline—the sinking of the Titanic. Quaintly, there's still a manual scoreboard. One red seat commemorates the spot where the longest home run ever hit in Fenway, by Ted Williams in 1946, ended up hitting a wrongheaded Yankees fan wearing a straw hat; it knocked some team-allegiance-changing sense into him. The press box, by contrast to the field during games, is a very quiet place. Baseball fandom's blend of passion and obsessive fact-spouting was articulated by an 8-year-old Indian boy on the tour who announced that box seats cost about $9,000 per season.



THE ETHEREAL FAIRYLAND OF LACE

London Lace (617-267-3506 or 800-926-LACE; www.londonlace.com), located at the corner of West Concord Street and Shawmut Ave. in the South End, sells real lace.

Lace, in the airy non-color of dreams and angels, brings a welcome coolness into any room. Diane Loesch Jones has essentially filled her grey, wainscoted shop with two styles of imported lace. The madras variety is finely textured, while the knottier Nottingham has a more open weave. Another Indian style has appliquéd flowers on a light cotton background, and they all have a possible destiny either on a window or covering a table—always floating airily. Unlike polyesters or blends, which feel rather stiff and fake, these are made of soft cotton. Stroll through the shop and appreciate the subtle variations: There are fleur-de-lis patterns, teeny little dots (including subtle green ones on a sheer background) and even a print with a Matisse flower flavor. Where there is hemwork, it's as beautiful as the rest of the panel. Some designs are patterned with herons; wouldn't lace just be their natural habitat! You can purchase either ready-made panels or fabric from bolts, which London Lace will customize to fit any window. Some incidental glassware for champagne (to toast your lace!) and other little specimens for refined drinking are also available. Though ordering by mail is popular, a trip to this pretty shop in the South End is fun.

REVIEW

HANOVER CHANGEOVER

The North End's newest trattoria does upscale Italian right.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

Via Valverde, the Hanover Street eatery that replaced the quirky, engaging trattoria Scalinatella a couple of years ago, has given way to Tresca, which seeks to build on its predecessor's upscale ambiance. Patrons are welcomed at the front entrance by a phalanx of gracious greeters, young blades attired in dark business suits and comely hostesses in chic cocktail dresses. The décor similarly pleases the eye. The upstairs dining room has remained substantially the same as it was as Via Valverde. Granted, the large mural of a Sicilian town that formerly graced one of the walls has been replaced; but the ceiling bisected by a dark, exposed wooden beam remains, as do the stone fireplace, stucco walls and indirect lighting. Downstairs, the former cocktail lounge has been transformed into a second dining area, with upholstered banquettes, mustard walls, terra cotta tile flooring, wine storage racks just below the soffit, framed paintings and mirrors, and attractive sconces in gracefully curved wrought iron.

The restaurant's wine list features a good range of Italian wines, including a Poggio Belvedere Rosso from Umbria ($30), full-bodied with nice acidity. I found it admirable that the informative sommelier actually recommended this wine, the less expensive of the two I was considering, rather than indulging in the almost universal tendency of waitstaff to up-sell. On our second visit to Tresca, the 2003 Filippo Gallino Barbera d'Alba ($29) proved equally worthy and value-priced. It boasted a remarkably complex and distinctive flavor along with its pleasant bouquet and fine finish, which surprised me, as I'd always considered barbera a light and fruity wine, without much in the way of complexity.

As befits a restaurant with Tresca's upscale aspirations and hefty prices, a gratis amuse-bouche preceded the appetizers: a tiny taste of tomato and eggplant with a small dab of goat cheese served in a white porcelain Chinese spoon, which perked up the taste buds in anticipation of more substantial sustenance to follow. An appetizer called Tresca misti ($16) comprised an impressive collection of asparagus tips, red and yellow cherry tomatoes, slices of red bell pepper and three kinds of olives ranging from giant green to tiny black, arrayed alongside chilled shrimp, silky-textured, mildly salty prosciutto, spicy sopresata, rich, garlicky mortadella, and chunks of gorgonzola and provolone cheese. It made up in size what it lacked in visual artistry, but a few of the ingredients suffered from being refrigerator-cold rather than room temperature. Better were the gamberoni croccante ($12), four large, chili-glazed shrimp with crunchy texture, decent flavor and an accompaniment of honeydew melon and cantaloupe. Sprigs of lively mint gave the dish a refreshing character. Insalata romano ($8), a nicely composed salad of baby arugula, yellow cherry tomatoes and rich Parmigiano-Reggiano cheese, came dressed in good-quality olive oil and lemon—lemon instead of vinegar, our waiter explained, so that it wouldn't clash so starkly with our wine.

Among Tresca's pastas, my favorite was the papardelle piemontesi ($20), a large portion of broad, firm noodles with mushrooms, red chard and a hint of truffle oil. The protein-rich mushrooms, their flavor enhanced by mushroom broth, made a more-than-satisfactory substitute for meat. The broad noodles, Italian pasta's answer to chow fun (my favorite Chinese noodles), had been cooked to just the right degree of al dente firmness. Orechietti ($17), tiny ear-shaped pasta, came tossed with house-made garlic sausage and broccoli rabe, and an intensely flavorful meat broth enhanced the dish. Finally, rigatoni Norma ($18) served as an excellent vehicle for a delicious sauce made from braised eggplant, tomato and ricotta cheese.

Tresca's main courses covered all the bases, from seafood through chicken to veal and beef. First prize at our table one night went to the grilled veal porterhouse ($34), a thick, tender, juicy chop, rare as ordered, served with a simple reduction of the cooking juices that gave it a wonderful flavor. The garnish of broccoli rabe, bathed in lemon-scented extra virgin olive oil, proved the perfect accompaniment. In the beef department, Tresca excelled with its filetto di manzo ($29). This impressive steak, generously thick and grilled to the perfect temperature, combined the tenderness of a filet with the hearty beef flavor of a coarser cut. It came with an assertively delicious sauce of sangiovese wine and gorgonzola cheese. A garnish of al dente, bright green asparagus spears hit the spot. The pollo umbro ($26), a Statler-cut breast of chicken (with half of the wing bone attached), had retained its succulent texture under a layer of crisp skin. The accompaniment of braised escarole spiked with sage added savor to the dish.

Tresca's seafood didn't succeed as well as its meat and chicken. Cioppino, a San Francisco specialty, traditionally was created by Italian and Portuguese sailors, taking its name from the word for fish stew in the Genovese dialect. Though Tresca's cioppino ($30) came chock full of ocean creatures—shrimp, mussels, clams, a lobster tail and a white-fleshed fish—it suffered from weak fish stock as its broth, imidly spiced with saffron. Moreover, while I enjoyed one of the grilled crostini lathered in pesto, there turned out to be several of them submerged in the broth, turning soggy before I fished them out to join the clam and mussel shells in the extra bowl provided by our waiter. Better was the salmone alla griglia ($26), a good-sized slab of salmon garnished with roasted fennel and a tasty olive-and-vegetable relish. While the fish seemed a little dry around the edges, its flavor was first-rate. (Note: Tresca's menu changes frequently; as of press time, this salmon entrée had been replaced by a more seasonal preparation.)

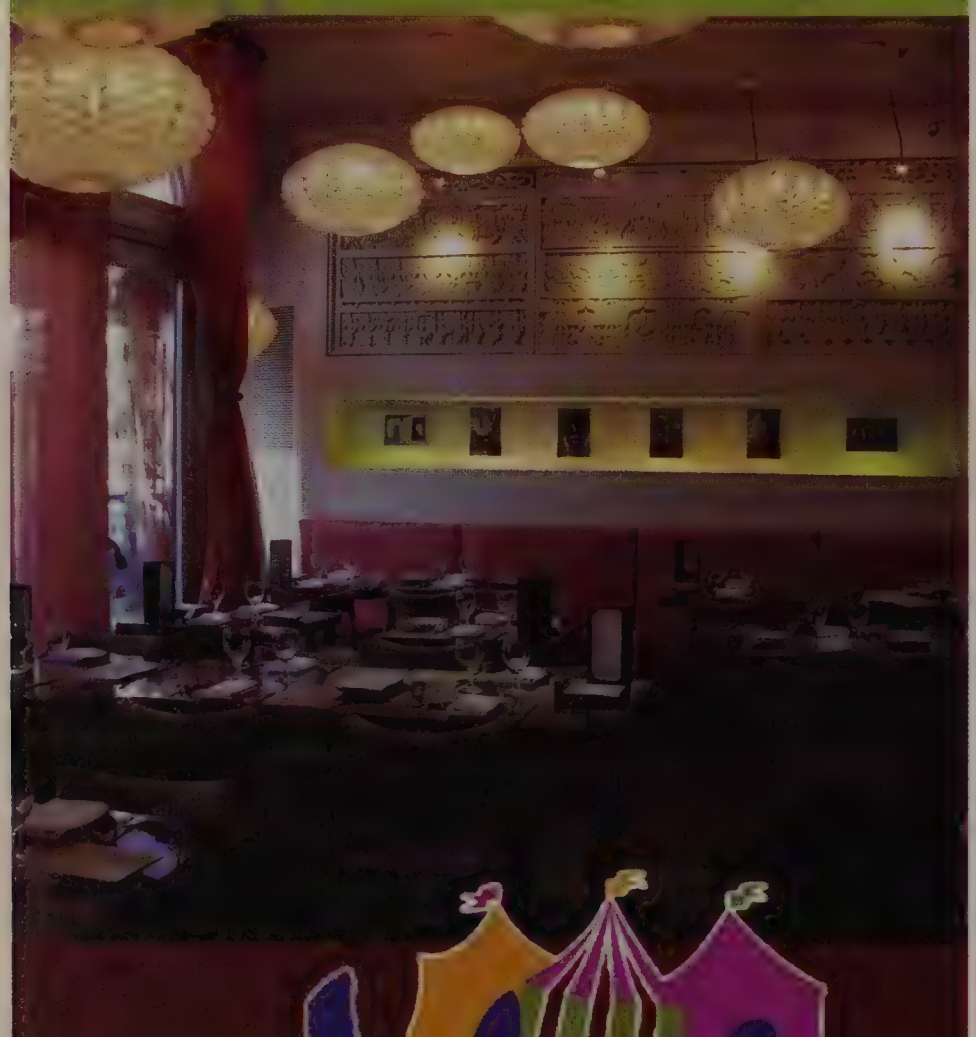
The quality of the bread at Tresca, made in-house, combined with the excellent olive oil poured generously onto bread plates, put our appetites at risk before we had even ordered. Desserts, the handiwork of pastry chef Adam Williams, included a top-notch peach-and-plum cobbler ($8), served hot with a crusty top in a small soufflé dish. Williams came to Tresca from South Carolina, where natives take their stone fruits seriously. His cobbler, well balanced between sweet and tart, lived up to that heritage, while the accompanying scoop of spicy chestnut ice cream served as a welcome, creamy foil. Sogno del cioccolato ($9), a dark chocolate cake hailed on the menu as "a chocolate lover's dream," fulfilled expectations as to chocolateness, but could have used a little more chocolate sauce to moisten parts of the cake that emerged a little dry. The proof of the cake, however, was in the eating, and not a morsel remained on the plate after we had finished.



Service at Tresca was friendly, attentive and, above all, informed. Our waiters displayed an ability to describe the dishes clearly and accurately, and their suggestions were helpful and reliable. They made dining at Tresca at once relaxed and festive, creating the perfect ambiance in which to enjoy first-rate food and well-chosen wines. IB

Grease Is the Word

From trans fat to transportation

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

As assistant director of the Natick Community Organic Farm, Jed Beach believes in agricultural practices that hark back to old traditions—and in using recycled fuel for his car, true to Rudolf Diesel's high hopes for his more-than-100-year-old invention. Diesel originally designed his non-combustion engine to run on vegetable oils. Today, Beach fuels his 1977 Mercedes 240 with used cooking oil from the deep-fat fryers of Sweet Basil in Needham.

Jed Beach fuels his Mercedes with the power of local cooking oil

"There's a fair amount of people—the alternative, organic farming crowd—doing this," says Beach. Not only is the practice environmentally friendly and cost-effective (Beach estimates he gets 35 miles per gallon, and Sweet Basil's owner doesn't have to go through the hassle and expense of disposing the used oil properly), but the aromatherapy benefits provide a gastronomic giggle: "When you switch over to the grease," says Beach, "it smells like chicken parm."

Drink Yourself Dotty

They may call it the Wine Club, but "membership" is available on a per-night basis at the Ashmont Grill in Dorchester. Every Monday night, a mere $25 buys you all the privileges of membership: your own stool at the curvy lounge table near the bar (underneath the requisite plasma television); generous samplings of the evening's chosen libation; and enough complimentary nibbles to satisfy diners with smaller appetites.

A recent Ashmont tasting of "sparklers" paired the likes of prosecco and authentic champagne with little lobster rolls, mushroom strudel, sliced beef and gorgonzola on toast, and more. Casual and relaxed, the vibe could best be described as "anti–country club": In the dining room, an eclectic crowd makes for a perfect portrait of Dorchester diversity.

Coming up on the club roster: Cognac on Jan. 22, and Tuscan wines on Jan. 29.

Welcome to Miller Time

Not to mention Pabst Blue Ribbon, Dos Equis and Schlitz Tall Boy time. Finally, six months after opening Soul Fire Barbecue in Allston, Wyeth Lynch has been granted the beer-and-wine license that he believed was his destiny ever since construction of the restaurant knocked loose an old artifact: "A can of Schlitz fell out of the wall, a can with the old pull-tab. It had to have been there for 30 years," he says.

Lynch's beer list currently ranges from the expected Harpoon to the slightly more exotic Lone Star (from Texas) and Red Stripe (Jamaica), and he says he's still making "fun decisions" about additions. For example? "Genesee Cream Ale… just 'cause I think it's hysterical. And we'll charge a premium for it!" he adds with a laugh.

It's Biblical! It's Noncanonical! It's Apocrypha Lounge!

Between its theological definitions and its secular meaning of "writings of questionable authenticity," the word apocrypha might seem an unusual choice for a restaurant name. Sommelier Greg Dickinson, however, prefers to focus on the word's Greek etymology: "It means 'hidden things,'" he says. And although its owners originally planned to open Apocrypha Lounge in Boston's South End, Dickinson expresses confidence that the new location, in the Needham space that formerly housed Indigo, will have no impact on the restaurant's ultimate success. "It doesn't really matter where you open a great restaurant, as long as it's a great restaurant," he says. In other words: Seek, and ye shall find. IB

Comedy: He's Brian Fellow!

Tracy Morgan's worn many hats over the course of his decade-and-change in the comedic spotlight. He's been Dominican Lou, Astronaut Jones and, of course, SNL's resident birdbrained zoologist, Brian Fellow. But most of all, he's been hilarious, and from Jan. 19 through 21, Morgan brings that funny to the Comedy Connection for a weekend's worth of shows. We weren't sure if we'd be seeing much more of Morgan after 2003's Tracy Morgan Show—his first shot at post-SNL stardom—stunk on ice, but he struck comedic gold again this fall as one of the stars—alongside Tina Fey and Alec Baldwin—of NBC's 30 Rock. Museums and Galleries: Taking the Plunge

First, a caveat: We mean no disrespect to Big Bang!, the abstract-art group show headlining the DeCordova's winter season. What's not to love about local artists "reinvigorating abstraction with paintings formally and conceptually relevant to many of the great intellectual concerns"? But while you're there, taking in all that avant vibe, sneak over to Jump, a terrific gem of a side exhibition, featuring 20 black-and-white photographs by Worcester photographer Stephen DiRado. No head-scratchers here; the concept is about as simple as it gets: people jumping off a bridge. Fascinated by the Martha's Vineyard tradition of leaping off the American Legion Memorial Bridge (on Beach Road between Edgartown and Oak Bluffs) into the water below, DiRado spent several consecutive summers capturing the anxiety and exhilaration of young vacationers as they first ponder, then dare to take, the 18-foot plunge. The DeCordova's whip-smart curators will no doubt offer plenty of fascinating insight into the artist's handling of light, line, composition, etc., but this art will be immediate to anyone who's ever felt butterflies just before clicking Send. Or leaping off a bridge, even. DeCordova Museum and Sculpture Garden, 51 Sandy Pond Road, Lincoln (781-259-8355). www.decordova.org. $9; $6, students and seniors; free, ages 5 and under. —Jolyon Helterman

Tastings: Impeccably Quaffed

The dream is always the same. A poshly dressed crowd fades in and out of focus. A firing squad encircles the room—wielding bottomless bottles, not guns—beckoning you this way to taste burgundy, that way to sip syrah, then malbec, then riesling, then cabernet, then chardonnay, then four kinds of pinot noir. You sway to the surge of the tannins as tuxedo-clad waiters monitor your progress, ensuring that the decadent hors d'oeuvres they proffer go precisely with the contents of your glass at any given moment. In this dream sequence, gone are the generic mini-quiches and rewarmed crabcakes; in their place are syrah-braised shortribs with wild mushrooms (for your syrah), pepper-crusted duck pastrami with strawberry-pinot compote (for your pinot noir) and pan-roasted scallops with chardonnay sauce (yep, you got it…). As you regain consciousness, you realize that it's all actually happening, that you're swaying comfortably at the Boston Wine Festival's opening reception and that you're relieved you brought none of your coworkers along. Boston Harbor Hotel, 70 Rowes Wharf, Boston (617-439-7000). www.bostonwinefestival.net. 7 pm. $100. —JH

Movies: Hungary for Some Quality?

Given the drivel that Hollywood's turned out of late, you might be better off taking a fresh $10 bill and flushing it down the toilet than wasting it on a 90-minute piece of cinematic garbage. For those seeking a little more bang for their movie buck, we give you the Harvard Film Archive's presentations of Hungarian film maker Béla Tarr's 450-minute, critically acclaimed Sátántangó. That's right: It's seven and a half hours long. The movie (in Hungarian with English subtitles) takes place just before the fall of communism, telling the story of a farming collective turned upside down by news that one of its long-lost members—a conniving schemer who was thought to have died years earlier—will be returning to the community. Naturally, events a-plenty unfold during the seven-plus hours of narrative, but we won't spoil the ending. For the ADD-addled, both viewings—which start at 2 pm—feature two intermissions, so sit back, enjoy the show and don't even try to claim you're not getting your money's worth. Harvard Film Archive Cinematheque, 24 Quincy St., Cambridge (617-496-2222). http://hcl.harvard.edu/hfa. Jan. 13 and 14, 2 pm. $10. —RL

SAT./JAN. 20

Music: The Foxx Vox

With an Oscar to his credit (for his performance in Ray), an expanding list of big roles on the big screen (Collateral, Miami Vice, Dreamgirls), and a Grammy-nominated R&B album under his belt, Jamie Foxx is on a roll. You can catch a little of his magic live when Foxx rolls into town on Jan. 20 for a gig at the Citi Wang Theatre. The show is part of a 19-city tour, and Foxx, who studied piano in college, performs music from his multi-platinum album Unpredictable, as well as stand-up comedy—the talent that got him into show business in the first place and onto In Living Color in the early '90s. Is there anything the dude can't do? Citi Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont St., Boston (617-482-9393). www.citicenter.org. 8 pm. $60-$70.

Heartbreaking Letters

Clint Eastwood's unflinching World War II epic asks all the right tough questions.

BY SEAN BURNS

At a hale and hearty 76 years young, Clint Eastwood obviously has no interest in working on his golf game, puttering around the garden or whatever it is big-screen legends do when they've passed the three-quarters-of-a-century mark. Clint's still working at a pace that puts young bucks to shame, as Letters From Iwo Jima marks the fourth film Eastwood has released in as many years. Putting it into perspective, roughly the same amount of time has passed since Quentin Tarantino made his last picture.

Kazunari Ninomiya, as Saigo, strives to get home to his family in Clint Eastwood's latest film.

Originally intended as a bookend to last October's more conventionally ambitious Flags of Our Fathers, Letters From Iwo Jima emerges as something far stronger, more unprecedented—perhaps even revolutionary. When was the last time an American filmmaker, let alone an icon like Eastwood, set about making a World War II battle epic told from the losing side's point of view? In Japanese with English subtitles, no less! Clearly, he's reached a point in his career where he's able to do whatever he wants, and for that we can feel very lucky, punk.

As narrow and controlled as Flags of Our Fathers was sprawling and unfocused, Letters has been adapted by first-time screenwriter Iris Yamashita from the recently unearthed papers of Lt. Gen. Tadamichi Kuribayashi, played here with dignity and reserve by Ken Watanabe. Kuribayashi arrives on the infernally hot and barren, black-sand island of Iwo Jima weighed down by the knowledge that this particular battle was lost before it even began. There will be no air support, and his dear old friend Baron Nishi (Tsuyoshi Ihara) has just let him in on a little secret that their superiors keep neglecting to mention: The Imperial Fleet has recently been wiped out, so Kuribayashi might as well forget about help from the navy.

Somewhere in the neighborhood of 100,000 Allied troops are already on their way to take the island, and with barely a fifth of that number at his disposal, plus dwindling supplies, Kuribayashi understands all too well that conventional battle plans are useless. The only recourse is to dig in, creating an elaborate network of tunnels in a last-ditch effort to stave off the inevitable.

And there lies the broken heart of Eastwood's harsh and uncompromising picture, as Letters From Iwo Jima is fundamentally a movie about facing up to mortality. What stays with you for days afterward are those long, unbearable passages of time cramped in dark, frightening tunnels, racked by the distant thunder of explosions while these young men are left to contemplate their own impending demise.

Of course, a large part of a Japanese soldier's discipline is the concept of death with honor. Investigating this notion with unexpected rigor, Yamashita and Eastwood frequently part ways with Kuribayashi and Nishi in order to follow hapless draftees Saigo (J-Pop star Kazunari Ninomiya) and Shimizu (Ryo Kase), who scramble from the fallen Mount Suribiachi and head for the lieutenant general's tunnel in hopes of making one last stand. The enormously empathetic Saigo has little use for stentorian codes of discipline; he's just a humble baker who wants to go home and see his wife and kid. Shimizu likes to think he's made of sterner stuff, but after watching the rest of their comrades-in-arms ceremoniously blow themselves up with hand grenades rather than retreat, he starts to second-guess his upbringing.

As we've come to expect from a Clint Eastwood picture, the filmmaking is both spare and elegant. Tom Stern's washed-out cinematography drains the color from the frame, save for sharp stabs of crimson blood. The plaintive score (composed by Clint's son Kyle with Michael Stevens) offers a mournful piano dirge where a lesser director would have opted for full orchestral bombast.

What Eastwood has accomplished here is something gutsy and tricky indeed. He's not asking you to root for the Japanese, nor does he stint on the infamous savagery and atrocity that characterized Pacific-theater battles. As in his flawed yet admirable Flags of Our Fathers, Eastwood never once questions the necessity of this war; he seeks only to illuminate its cost, which in the hands of such a sensitive filmmaker becomes almost too horrible to bear.

During my favorite scene of his 1976 masterpiece The Outlaw Josey Wales, Eastwood's battle-scarred, blood-soaked Civil War vet carves out an uneasy truce with a Native American adversary, in part by saying, "Governments make wars, not people." In one of Letters' most unforgettable moments, Nishi reads aloud from a letter he's discovered on the body of a fallen American G.I. The lovingly banal small-town sentiments from the boy's mother echo with familiarity throughout these haunted tunnels. All wars depend on the systematic dehumanization of the enemy. Letters From Iwo Jima wants to remind us that we sometimes have more in common than we'd like to think. iB

Apocalypto ★★★
Another bonkers bloodbath from that ever-stabl beacon of sanity Mel Gibson. Mad Mel's latest is es sentially an epic pulse-pounding chase sequence, se during the 15th-century collapse of the Mayan Em pire, boasting a surfeit of subtitles and bouncing sev ered heads. Newcomer Rudy Youngblood stars a Jaguar Paw, a handsome, young husband and fathe who narrowly escapes seeing his still-beating hear ripped out during a ritual sacrifice, and thus hoofs i homeward with plenty of heavies on his heels. Gib son might be a bigot and a loon, but he's also a nat ural-born filmmaker, boasting an eye for compositio and movement akin to that of the early silent-film pi oneers. Photographed in high-definition digital vide by the legendary Dean Semler, the film is a triumph o brawny, visceral technique. Referencing everythin from El Topo to Cannibal Holocaust, Gibson meshe art-cinema flourishes with action-movie tropes unti the end result feels something like what might hap pen if Werner Herzog directed the next Rambo sequel (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Babel ★★½
Brilliantly assembled, strikingly well acted and, afte awhile, just about impossible to take seriously, the lat est collaboration between director Alejandro Gon zález Iñárritu and screenwriter Guillermo Arriaga i an exquisitely crafted exercise in audience abuse tha grows more outlandish and tiresome with each reel Like their previous films, Amores Perros and 21 Grams Babel takes three seemingly unrelated stories an slowly reveals hidden connections between stranger united in tragedy. This relentlessly downbeat medita tion on misfortune stars Brad Pitt and Cate Blanchet as a disaster-prone American couple on vacation i Morocco, with loosely related tales of woe ripplin across the globe in the wake of their unhappiness Iñárritu is a tremendous visual stylist, and the aston ishing segment about a depressed deaf-mute teenag girl (Rinko Kikuchi) living in Japan stands as some o this year's most powerful and evocative filmmaking But Babel never knows when to say when. Arriaga' script just keeps piling calamities on top of catastro phes until the film eventually becomes more numbin than affecting. A little levity, or even a bit of re straint, would've gone a long way. (At Kendall Squar and in the suburbs.)

Blood Diamond ★★
Director Edward Zwick, who started out as a cocreato of the TV show Thirtysomething before moving int bloated, preachy spectacles such as Courage Under Fir and The Last Samurai, makes action movies for guilt liberals. Trying to swaddle his relentless message-mon gering in slick Hollywood clichés, Zwick often come up with the worst of both worlds: big budget adven tures that grind to a halt every 10 minutes to lectur you. Blood Diamond should've been a corker, as th Sierra Leone diamond massacres of the late 1990s ar rich with cinematic possibilities, and Leonardo Di Caprio delivers a surprisingly convincing, charismati performance as a scummy smuggler taking advantag of a noble mine slave (Djimon Hounsou, who's playe so many slaves in movies since starring in Amistad, h could probably perform Roots as a one-man show b now) to chase a pink diamond the size of a golf ball Alas, Zwick squanders this promising setup with devastating lack of forward momentum. Every scen runs at least twice as long as it needs to, and Zwick' pompous, self-consciously prestigious tone negates th story's gritty urgency. (At Boston Common, Fenway Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Casino Royale ★★★½
A bruising, extremely satisfying reboot for the ailin James Bond franchise, this is 007's Batman Begins Don't look for any invisible cars, bad double entendre or conveniently talkative supervillains angling fo world domination here, as this stripped-down prequ deliberately avoids the bloated campiness that boggec down Pierce Brosnan's desultory efforts. Rediscoverin the character's roots via the first of Ian Fleming's nov els, Casino Royale follows our still wet-behind-the-ear secret agent on a twisty, violent maiden mission in volving some shady terrorists and stock-market ma nipulators, along with the usual exotic locales, luxur cars and staggeringly beautiful women. Everythin about this 007 feels a lot leaner and a good dea meaner than we've come to expect in recent decades The close-quartered violence is messy and leaves a mark, but most importantly, James Bond feels not jus human, but vital again, thanks in no small part to a bravura performance from Daniel Craig. He emerge as the brutish, brokenhearted 007 for our times, appro priately tougher and sadder than the preceding incar nations. Welcome back, Mr. Bond. It's been too long (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

ildren of Men ★★★★
pick for the best picture of 2006, Alfonso Cua-'s Children of Men is the kind of movie you only ught they didn't make anymore. A ruthless, an- y politicized piece of speculative science fiction t conveniently doubles as an edge-of-your-seat se thriller, the film uses a dark vision of the future critique the way we're living right now. As in the t sci-fi, the film feels more topically and emotion- keyed into our current, uneasy cultural moment n any present-tense tale possibly could. In a fright- ngly believable future London after a worldwide rtility crisis has sent civilization into a violent spin, Clive Owen gives a magnificent old-school mphrey Bogart performance, shepherding human- s last hope through a bombed-out battleground l rediscovering depths of compassion and valor he got he even had. Cuarón and his brilliant cine- tographer, Emmanuel Lubezki, have rewritten the es of the action film, shooting exclusively with ilable light and in a succession of long, miracu- sly unbroken camera movements, thus lending a ve-wracking real-time anxiety to the proceedings. t Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

reamgirls ★★½
razzle-dazzle and very little soul, writer-director l Condon's breathlessly anticipated (and even more athlessly paced) adaptation of the beloved Broad- y musical frantically flings itself from one show- pping number into another, never settling down g enough for us to become emotionally invested. A ck-racking alternate history of Motown, Dreamgirls rs Beyoncé Knowles as a Diana Ross–ish diva mped to the forefront of a Supremes-esque group by e Machiavellian Berry Gordy clone (Jamie Foxx, prisingly inert here). Former American Idol contes- t Jennifer Hudson belts out the show's signature g, "And I'm Telling You I'm Not Going," with an th-shattering set of pipes, but her performance ms to shut down and go blank whenever she's not led upon to sing. The largely novice cast lacks the ce of personality required to breathe life into these ck figures, save for an electrifying Eddie Murphy, o dominates every moment he's onscreen as a self- structive James Brown/Marvin Gaye composite. ndon rushes headlong through the decades with h a bare minimum of characterization, this toe-tap- g crowd-pleaser feels curiously empty. (At Boston mmon, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

he Good German ★★½
olific director Steven Soderbergh tends to alter- te studio blockbusters like Erin Brockovich and the ean's caper series with strange little low-budget periments like this glum, downbeat murder-mys- y set in post–World War II Berlin. The trick here 't just that the picture is set in 1945, but that derbergh actually set about making it as if it were, deed, still 1945. Using black-and-white film stock, tique fixed-focal-length lenses, primitive sound cording, high-contrast noir lighting, rear-projec- n special effects and every other retro-gimmick in e book, The Good German is an aesthetic feast for assic movie buffs. It's hard not to adore Soder- rgh's loving homages to Casablanca and The Third an, and the oversized pre-Method performances George Clooney and Cate Blanchett are indeed a at. Unfortunately, the underlying material (adap- d by Paul Attanasio from Joseph Kanon's novel) is ceedingly grim and unpleasant, leaving a bitter aftertaste. Even more problematic is Soderbergh's decision to ramp up the sex and violence, littering the dialogue with wall-to-wall profanity. Such ill-advised contemporary flourishes shatter the movie's smoky, traditional spell. (At Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

The Good Shepherd ★★
Robert De Niro imparts roughly the same level of energy to his second directorial effort that he's brought to most of his movie roles in recent years. That's a gentle way of saying that the darn thing just lies there on the screen. Matt Damon works some subtle wonders as Edward Wilson, a fictional composite standing in for paranoid WASP America during the founding of the CIA. Segueing from Yale's secret Skull & Bones society to the Bay of Pigs invasion while surrounded by a lot of the same well-funded pals, Wilson's an emotional dead fish. The Good Shepherd wants to track the implosion of his spirit in service to God and country, but the character was already so closed off and sealed up to begin with, there's not a lot to be lost over the course of these three ponderous, bone-dry hours. A miscast Angelina Jolie gets stuck in the thankless wife role, while cameos from De Niro's New York pals Alec Baldwin and Joe Pesci only momentarily liven up the stuffy proceedings. (At Boston Common, Fenway, and in the suburbs.)

Happy Feet ★★★
Director George Miller, the demented crackpot visionary who brought us both The Road Warrior and Babe: Pig in the City, has done it again with what is by far the darkest, weirdest computer-animated talking-animal movie musical you're ever going to see. Elijah Wood lends his voice to a misfit young penguin born a little bit different and therefore unable to participate in any of the bizarre mating rituals we all witnessed in that hit documentary last summer. Strange how March of the Penguins left out the part where the flightless birds all sing jukebox oldies to one another. Cast out of society by the stringent religious order governing his starving tribe, Wood's fluffy, tap-dancing sprite discovers the giant, menacing outside world, and eventually receives a healthy lesson in the cause-and-effect chain of environmental pollution. Happy Feet smuggles tons of coded progressive messages in between the dazzling song-and-dance numbers, "virtually choreographed" using motion-capture techniques by the sensational Savion Glover. There's a strong conservation moral here, as well as a few swift kidney punches to our current religion-versus-science debate. Please note: Half a star has been subtracted due to Robin Williams' unfunny, offensive voice-over work as all the "ethnic" animals. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The History Boys ★★½
Sparkling, witty banter by playwright Alan Bennett considerably brightens this been-there-done-that ode to the joys of education, the fruits of knowledge, cherished inspirational teachers and pretty much every other schoolboy cliché under the sun. A sunnier, gayer Dead Poets Society, Bennett's multiple-Tony winner has barely been adapted at all for the big screen, using the same cast and what appears even to be the same blocking as the stage production. (Director Nicholas Hytner originally launched the play in the West End, and here obviously felt no need to revise his work.) Richard Griffiths earns quite a few giggles as a randy old humanities instructor, fond of giving his boys valuable life lessons as well as handsy rides home on his motorcycle. Stephen Campbell Moore shows up as a more insidiously modern competitive contrast, aiming to "teach towards the test" instead of just for the love of all things literary. Bennett's dialogue is delightful, but this is the kind of wordy, overly schematic fare that plays better on the boards. (At Coolidge Corner, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

The Tony Award–winning cast of the History Boys bring witty banter to the big screen.

Notes on a Scandal ★★★½
This deliciously catty cup of arsenic-laced tea gives Dame Judi Dench her meatiest role in ages, starring as an acerbic, secretly needy schoolmarm spinster with a crush on Cate Blanchett's willowy, in-over-her-head art teacher. Adapted by acid-tongued playwright Patrick Marber from a novel by Zoe Heller, Notes on a Scandal is a viciously hilarious British piss-take on our own Mary Kay Letourneau saga. After Dench spies Blanchett rolling around the art-studio floor with a 15-year-old soccer hooligan, the cutthroat wench tries spinning the situation to her benefit in this twisted tale of emotional blackmail. The story is told through Dench's unintentionally revealing diary entries, read in a pitch-perfect voice-over by the actress while the Phillip Glass score provides an ironically comic counterpoint. Director Richard Eyre (who worked with Dench previously in Iris) maintains a brisk pace with a minimum of fuss. Blanchett has never been so achingly vulnerable, and Dame Judi is simply a talons-bared delight. Very naughty, but a lot of fun. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Pan's Labyrinth ★★★½
This boldly original grown-up fairy tale from visionary writer-director Guillermo del Toro boasts images of both shocking horror and stark, elemental beauty. In the dark days just after the Spanish Civil War, troubled, unwanted young Ofelia (the extraordinary Ivana Baquero) copes with awful circumstances by escaping into an imaginary dreamland full of fairies and folk legends that subtly reflect and refract the trauma of her harsh, day-to-day experiences. In other words, imagine Alice suffering under Franco's regime, and falling down a politically and metaphorically freighted rabbit hole into a Wonderland of teeth-gnashing monsters. The underrated auteur behind such eye-popping treats as Blade 2 and Hellboy, del Toro has a distinctive personal vision and a unique visual signature, qualities that for years have gone unheralded, thanks to the intelligentsia's snooty disdain for the horror genre. Besides offering sights that will linger long in your dreams, Pan's Labyrinth includes a memorably terrifying performance from With a Friend Like Harry's Sergi Lopez, and a warm, heroic turn from Y Tu Mamá También star Maribel Verdu. (At Kendall Square.)

The Pursuit of Happyness ★★★
Don't be fooled by the cloying ad campaign and that too-cute-by-half misspelled title: Italian director Gabriele Muccino's first English-language film is an admirably tough-minded piece of work about a family slipping into poverty during Ronald Reagan's go-go '80s. Will Smith finally sheds his arrogance, graying his hair and underplaying nicely as the real-life Horatio Alger Chris Gardner, a sly go-getter who, despite having only a high school education and no experience, shot to the top of a highly competitive internship program at the Dean Witter brokerage firm. But Chris never mentioned to his colleagues on the trading floor that he also happened to be homeless, bouncing from train-station restroom to overcrowded shelter with his son (played by Jaden Christopher Syre Smith, the actor's own toddler). It's startling to see Chris and his boy struggling hand-to-mouth, and Steve Conrad's screenplay doesn't skimp on their fear and desperation. Muccino downplays the tale's inherent sap factor, and the tears he finally jerks are hard-earned indeed. Well done. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Rocky Balboa ★★½
Sentimental attachments go a long way toward redeeming Sylvester Stallone's sixth, comically tardy outing as everybody's favorite punch-drunk palooka. In other words, if you don't have fond memories of growing up with the earlier flicks, this one is going to feel like torture. Aimed expressly at old fans, Sly's valedictory to his signature character is stuffed to the sprocket holes with mawkish inspirational speeches and sledgehammer nostalgia. Depressed and down on his luck after the death of his beloved wife, Adrian, the Italian Stallion dons those trunks yet again for one final bout, taking on sleazy, spoiled hotshot Mason "The Line" Dixon (real-life former light heavyweight champ Antonio Tarver) for a publicity-stunt exhibition match. Embarrassingly personal, Rocky Balboa is more like a forum for writer-director Stallone to share some heartfelt, long-winded musings about his own ruined career and panicked fear of obsolescence. It isn't really defensible at all, but there's also something sort of sweet and endearing about its naked, goofy sincerity. Even if Sly has never quite figured out how to direct an actual movie, I daresay there's still nobody better at assembling one hell of a rousing, stand-up-and-cheer training montage. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Volver ★★★
The title translates as "To Return," a concept that echoes in several sneaky ways throughout Pedro Almodóvar's relaxed, casually complex movie. Penélope Cruz has never been better than she is in this twisted homage to Spanish telenovelas and Douglas Sirk melodramas. The plot is too complex and upside-down to even begin trying to explain, but what you'll be most struck by is Almodóvar's sheer, unabashed adoration of women. The movie has a rich, feminine glow to it. Almost all of the scenes take place while Pedro's women are preparing food, styling each other's hair or somehow nurturing one another. There's something almost primal about Almodóvar's vision of females as healers and caregivers—their community's life force. Though a bit overplotted and overlong, this is a very sweet film; a love letter to the kindness and resilience of ladies everywhere. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

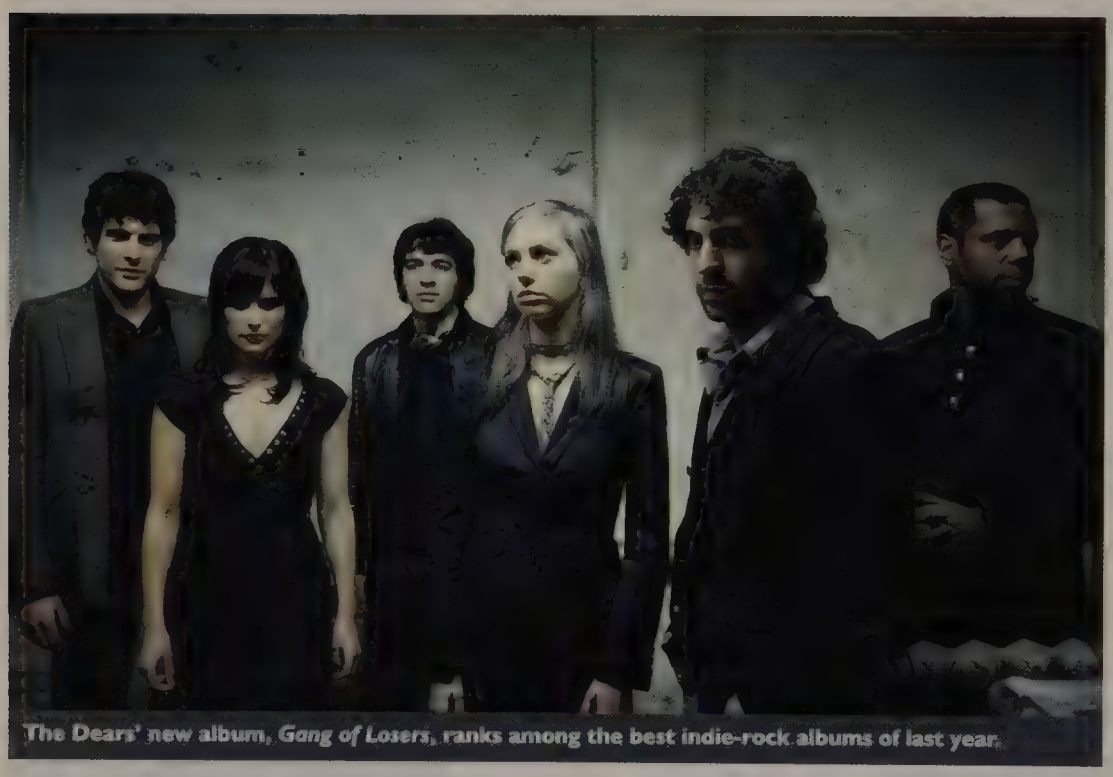
Party Crashers



Montreal's artful Dears grow bolder in sound and spirit.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Murray Lightburn didn't discover the Beatles until he was in his 20s, partly because his jazz-musician father called the British Invasion "a tired bunch."

"I'm a late bloomer on so many levels," says Lightburn, 35, singer-songwriter for Montreal band the Dears. "When I read that Serge Gainsbourg didn't put out an album until he was 30, I felt some comfort in that."

French pop eccentric Gainsbourg was one of Lightburn's early musical heroes, along with onetime Smiths frontman Morrissey. But the singer once dubbed "the black Morrissey" adds, "Right now the biggest influence on the Dears is the Dears themselves. What we have to be careful of is not getting too far into that and just repeating ourselves."

The Dears' new album, Gang of Losers, ranks among the best indie-rock albums of last year.

No worries there. As a hypnotic masterwork of orchestral pop, the Dears' 2004 disc, No Cities Left, was tough to top. But the sextet has met the challenge with the new Gang of Losers, which breaks the mold with more-aggressive, artful ambitions and ranks among the best indie-rock CDs of 2006.

Gang of Losers ranges from the post-punk chop of "Death or Life We Want You" (with its synthesizer-tinged refrain "Nobody wants you, but we want you") to the climactic "Find Our Way to Freedom," which features an a cappella lament and bracing sax solo by Murray's father, the Rev. William Lightburn.

The younger Lightburn, who's trying to crash the party on this side of the border as one of the few black frontmen in indie rock, relates to the role of outsider throughout Gang of Losers. And he's not shy about addressing the hot topic of race within the universality of the human condition.

"There are just some unfortunate truths, and anybody can fall into a scenario that's on the album," he says. "There are a lot of people who feel like they're on the outside. There's no drama in it. There's a misconception about the way we deliver our music that there's all this drama and self-pity. It's just factual. Knowing is half the battle."

So the jaunty "Whites Only Party" both exposes a raw nerve and transcends the black and white. And Lightburn's lyric "We ain't here to steal your women, or at least that wasn't planned" delivers an ironic jab in light of his 2005 marriage to Dears keyboardist-singer Natalia Yanchak.

"I'm trying to have a sense of humor about it, but at the same time, I think a lot of white folks are definitely confused about what racism is, and they don't know that they are racist," says Lightburn, adding with a chuckle, "But I'm probably racist because I'm talking about white folks and just making a sweeping generalization!"

Elsewhere on the new CD, Lightburn reflects on war in "Fear Made the World Go 'Round," while "Ballad of Humankindness" considers the homeless. "I have experienced things in my life that have taught me to try and be considerate of others," says the singer, now a father himself. "To try and always be that way is tough. But I've got to at least try.

"As much as people call us melancholy and depressing, I'm actually quite the optimist," he says from his Montreal home. "It's just a way to make sense of everything."

A lot is clearly making sense for the Dears on Gang of Losers, which, in contrast to the strings-cushioned No Cities Left, embraces a tougher, more immediate sound.

"Mostly that came about from just the amount of touring we did leading into the recording," Lightburn says. "It was just the six of us every night, with no extra players, making as much noise as we could, and that's basically represented on this album.... There are a few bells and whistles. But most of the time, it's just us."

Before the band recorded the CD at his home, Lightburn prepared in a three-piece with bassist Martin Pelland and drummer George Donoso III. "There was an element of that 'Hey, we can really do this stripped-down vibe and it's pretty phat,'" he says. "Some stuff, I'd just show up in the studio with my guitar and a melody and say, 'OK, where is this going?' It was a cool experience, because I didn't feel as much pressure as I had in the past making Dears albums. I've been working with these guys for so long."

It's been more than six years since Lightburn began working with Yanchak, Pelland and Donoso, while the current lineup was sealed two years ago with Patrick Krief on guitar and Valerie Jodoin-Keaton on keyboards, flute and vocals.

"I don't know if we're going to make another record the way we made Gang of Losers," Lightburn says. "After we made No Cities Left, I didn't think we'd ever make a record that way. You live and learn after every experience.

"We can't keep spinning our wheels the same way forever," he says. "I don't think that's the way the Dears roll." iB

rockie horoscope

JANUARY 10 – 23, 2007 BY ROCKIE GARDINER

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Mutual money matters (ours and theirs) that have been stalled for far too long (two years?) should move forward once your Saturn ruler leaves stubborn Leo for adaptable Virgo around Labor Day. Mid-December is when lucky Jupiter enters Capricorn and begins laying on its many gifts: prosperity, health, happiness. However, energetic Mars, working at full capacity (exalted in Capricorn) right now, urges you to take action before March. That's when a young or horny old Goat's thoughts turn to love. (In July, too.)

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

What makes this year different from last year are the advantages bestowed by protective Jupiter in your house of business associates, club members and fellow sociopolitical travelers. You won't have to ask to receive. However, the loftier your ideals are, the greater the payoffs—spiritually, philosophically and monetarily. More good news: Restrictive Saturn finally leaves Leo, the sign of your cosmic "other," in September. Fanciful Neptune in your sign starts its summer break in June. You do the same.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Who knew your career was going to be so much more rewarding or that your reputation in the community would improve? The Fish is a very social being this year, primarily because generous Jupiter in benefit-bound Sagittarius reigns from the top of your solar chart. Strict Saturn enters Virgo, the sign of your partnership experience, in September, but the other areas of your life pretty much stay the same. Venus attracts lovers in February; Mars jacks up your sex drive in April. Mercury is in Pisces from Feb. 2 until April 10, some of it in retrograde.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

A powerhouse of a year for an ambitious Aries, your Mars ruler's biannual meeting with "cut the crap" Pluto doubles your determination to get your own way. Mid-January through February with Mars in Capricorn, the sign of the successful executive, can propel your reputation to new heights. In spring, the Warrior zeroes in on your personal life and physical well-being. Prosperous Jupiter provides growth through mind-expanding travels and fateful encounters; a new guru? Later for the frivolous playmates, a romance grows serious.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Bulls become even more involved with other people's money; however, this year lucky Jupiter can protect your joint financial arrangements. And while sex might not be any better, there's likely to be more of it. Mind-f---ing, too. The main issues are still generated by stern Saturn in your zone of real estate and family affairs. Although your career might not take off dramatically, the more idealistic or artistic your work, the more people will relate. Social life blossoms in spring, with complications during the summer.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

Mark your calendar: In 2007 your Mercury ruler turns retrograde on Feb. 13, June 15 and Oct. 11. Each period lasts a little over three weeks; however, you'll need some days to prepare and recover. Since nothing new begins then, why not visit old friends, schedule a real vacation or try rewriting the script? Especially consider loving interludes during April, and again in November. But the true blessings come from wealthy and wise Jupiter inhabiting Sagittarius, home to your marriage and business partners, for the first time in 12 years.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

Work and money, money and work. There are better opportunities when it comes to expanding your job description, with more-organized, longer-range strategies concerning finances. Take a chunk of time off while Mercury is retrograde for your birthday, ditto during December when usually active Mars treads water in your sign. Expect happy days in May, as lovable Venus feathers her nest in Cancer for the month. Socially speaking, December looks promising as well. The two total lunar eclipses on March 3 and Aug. 28 are best viewed anywhere but here. Why not Africa or Australia?

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Almost everything will seem easier this year, thanks to free-wheeling Jupiter in Sagittarius, the fire sign you're most compatible with. The fact that the jolly giant is in your house of creativity, games and romance is the grease that'll spin those wheels—especially the wheel of fortune. Even if some Lions have to deal with stringent Saturn in Leo until Labor Day, lucky Jupiter is happy to provide compensation. Its wit and wealth also help you fulfill a partner's fantasies during Easter week, and again at Halloween.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

Read Gemini for your Mercury ruler's annual retrograde schedule and jot down the dates when trivial things can mean a lot. The Virgo full moon eclipse on March 3 could affect your emotional well-being; so might the Virgo new moon eclipse on Sept. 11. Venus chooses your sign for her long, lingering retrogression (July 14 to Nov. 8), with time off in September. But that's when Saturn begins its two-year trek through Virgo, where the taskmaster will offer lessons in patience, consistency or respectability you weren't aware were necessary.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

So much for the legendary summer romance. While your Venus ruler is retrograde (July 14 to Sept. 8), your social life could suck. Or you might hook up with someone from your distant past; during retrograde, relationships can go either way. November is terrific for attracting people to your favorite cause, but for the hottest time one-on-one, the first two months of the year, while affectionate Venus meets up with passionate Mars, is prime time. And if your new love interest is an Aquarius, the odds it'll last improve. P.S. More money is more easily obtained.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

Ignore the downgrade, as Pluto continues its role as your co-ruling "planet." This year, because its orbit barely budges from the Galactic Center of the Milky Way, Pluto's power to transform you (and the rest of the world) is truly cosmic. Status-savvy Saturn, still dominating your Leo midheaven, offers access to the executive elite. Use it before you lose it. Generous Jupiter in your Sag money house provides more do-re-mi to ensure that this Valentine's Day, when loving Venus is in your house of romance, is memorable.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

It bears repeating. For the first time in 12 years, your beneficent Jupiter ruler is in Sagittarius, retrograde (i.e., less active) from early April to early August. Take the vacation of your dreams. Go on hiatus during retrograde; launch a new enterprise, expand your network, polish your personal image while the god of good fortune moves forward. Saturn in fire-friendly Leo offers stability if you step beyond the range of possibilities, expanded though they may be. February through June is your season for making whoopee!

IMMORTAL IMPERSONAL

Scent and No Sensibility

To the "sisters" in the front row of the Ray Lamontagne concert on Dec. 18: Too much perfume! I'm the woman who sat behind you, holding a paper towel over her nose and mouth to keep from gagging. When the marijuana cloud floated past, I was relieved—at least that's a chemical I can tolerate.

—sick@Ray

Up in Arms

To Mr. Inconsiderate: So there I was, sitting with my girlfriend on a weekend afternoon, enjoying an overpriced lunch at Faneuil Hall. The day was nice, the crowds were big and the tables were messy. A party of four arrived at the table next to us: an Asian couple, their carriage-bound infant and a bespectacled blonde woman. The women agreed that they would get the food while the husband held down the fort and watched his child. Then you came, with your burly figure, your old hat and your thick beard, barely holding onto your food. You asked the father, "This seat taken?" to which he politely replied in broken English that his wife and her friend would be back soon. But that didn't stop you. Instead you decided to park your keister in that chair, even as the man repeated in a polite tone that there were people coming. You didn't care; you simply said, "I got no hands," in reference to the unfortunate loss of your appendages. The man could only raise his bandaged hand and say, "My hand is hurt," to which you replied, "Yeah, but mine aren't growing back." You said this as seemingly witty banter, but I really believe it was just a rude rebuttal intended to displace the father, his infant child and the two women—who returned to find the father at a new table, courtesy of two polite young women who witnessed the incident along with us. You disgust me.

—Fed Up With Human Nature

Better Late Than Never

The last two months have been a wonderful time for me. It's been intense, emotionally charged and wonderful to have you back in my life. Our relationship has developed so quickly, though it was a long time in the making. We've had our share of disappointments, bad relationships and sideshows, yet here we are more than two years later. I wasn't there for you for a long time, but I am now. You mean the world to me; I just wanted to let you know. Love you sweetie—always have and always will.

—Totally Gone in Boston

Honk If You're Ornery

To the woman on McGrath Highway: You obviously didn't like that I had to stop because the car in front of me decided, at the last minute, to dive in and block my lane, thereby causing you, Ms. Road Rager, to flip out. Sorry that I couldn't get around the car—because a TRUCK was coming. Sorry you had to wait one second until I could get around the car. You have no business having a driver's license; you're going to hurt someone someday. Oh, one more thing: Your ugly car matches your ugly personality. Happy New Year!

—A Good Driver

Unsportsmanlike Conduct

To the degenerates who stole my purse at the Lions-Pats game (you were seated in Section 120, seats 10-20 in row 12): I hope someone, somewhere could look you up and give you the freakin' beat-down you deserve. You're lucky I don't have the means to do this; otherwise you'd be sorry you messed with me. I have evidence in the form of the pseudo-rap (typical white boy) ring tones you downloaded to my stolen phone (smack that?). You were singing the same song behind me all through the game—that is, when you weren't busy harassing the general public or otherwise acting grotesque. How old are you, 30? 40? I think it's time to grow up. I'm sure a big dose of karma is heading your way.

—WC

Lavatory Rat

To the piece of s--- who flipped out because I didn't have a key to the bathroom of a Quincy Center restaurant on Dec. 11: Some crackhead had already lost the key to the men's room, and I'm not allowed to give you the women's room key. A long dark hallway, no one around and a man chillin' in the women's room: Think about it, asshole. I told you Starbucks was four doors down with a perfectly accessible bathroom. You flipped out! Are you kidding, Satan? It's a mofo bathroom; there are plenty around. No one gets paid enough to deal with scary, crazy people who flip out over a bathroom.

—Staying Cool

Dr. McSleazy?

To the women of Boston (and those who work at MEEI in particular): Stay away from the doc known as Hospital Hunk. He's nothing but a lying, cheating, worthless human being. He'll tell you how lucky he is to have found you, that it's easy to find attractive women but hard to find a beautiful woman with whom he can have an intelligent conversation. You'll soon discover, however, that all he wants is to talk, never really caring about you and what you have to say. He does a fabulous job of playing the victim of his own life. It's always someone else's fault that he has no time, is so busy and can't possibly make plans in advance. If you've slept with him in 2006, you should know that he was pretending to be in a committed relationship. If you choose to sleep with him in 2007, be sure to check under the sheets for women's underwear. You never know what you'll find at the foot of his bed.

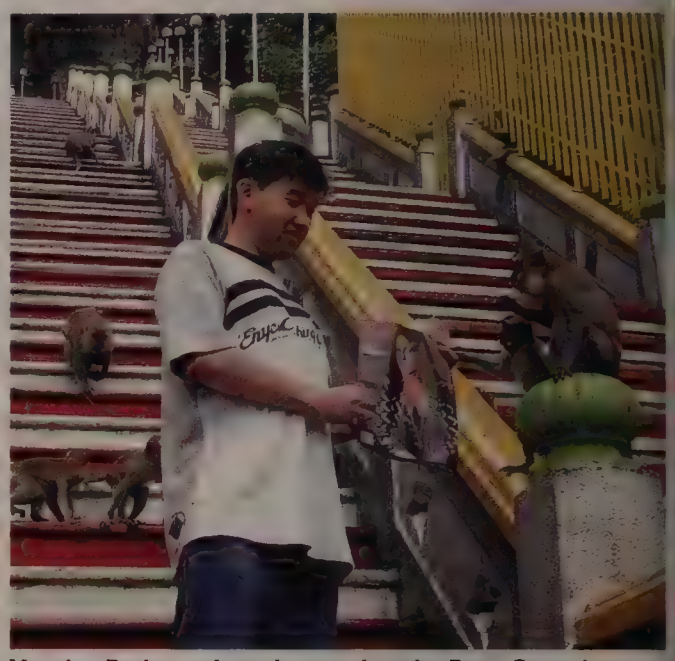
UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP.



Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Kriengsak Chareonwongsak is a member of Thailand's parliament—not a member of Parliament Funkadelic as was earlier reported.

Thokozeni Lipato and Jori Carter visited the banks of Malawi's Shire River, which was renamed in 1990 to celebrate Talia Shire's knockout performance in Rocky V.

Yeonjee Park monkeyed around at the Batu Caves in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia. The Batu Caves are home to Malaysian business tycoon/crime fighter Bruce Wang.

Jennifer Weiner and Jim Conviser brought the IMPROPER on a voyage to Brazil's Iguazu Falls. It took all three of us to help Iguazu back up.

Steve Lavoie, Rob Nies, Joel Slager and Karl Park snapped a shot in Prague's Old Town Square—which they promptly purchased for five American dollars.

While in England, Justin Schellenger nearly split his pants straddling the prime meridian, which in turn splits the Eastern and Western Hemispheres.

IMPROPER BOUNTY

BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER: Taking a dip in some gloriously frigid 35-degree water at the annual Polar Bear Jump Off and the Ugly Fish Toss, held Jan. 19–21 in Seward, Alaska.

WELL, AT LEAST YOU CAN LOOK...

Miami might have Art Basel, but Boston has the December Sale at the School of the Museum of Fine Arts, where collectors and connoisseurs congregate over cocktails to raise money by buying blue-chip artists like David Hockney and Robert Rauschenberg, as well as work by the school's faculty members, alumni and students.

On hand for the festivities were mega-collector Barbara Lee, curators Cliff Ackley and Paul Tucker, gallery owners Abi Ross Goodman and Portia Harcus, the supremely gorgeous Mary Jean Keany and Gwenn Snider, ubiquitous do-gooder Frances Moseley, Nashville-bred magnolia blossom Trevania Dudley Henderson, rascally real estate mogul Juan Prieto, the very fabulous Alison Salke, jeweler to the stars Cedric Tonello, Harvard B-School factotum Rosabeth Moss Kanter, financial titan and yachtsman Ernest Jacquet with the flawless Ann Trautenberg, the startlingly beautiful Danny Theodat Levy, party pair Becky Searles and Sean McNally, dazzling young thing Kyla Akin, the wildly talented Brian Burkhardt, the ever-affable Gilbert Winn, the suspiciously tanned Peter Creighton, and one woman who said, apropos of we're-not-sure-what, "It's all about my boobs. It's always about my boobs."

Other amusing remarks overheard:

"That photo reminds me of my old shrink's office in Cambridge, with the uncomfortable couch, the box of Kleenex and the African mask on the wall."

"I know it's supposed to be high art, but that painting looks like soft-core gay porn."

And the following exchange:

"Did your husband give you a budget for this evening?"

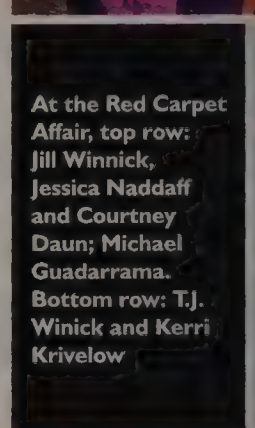
"Yes, he was very precise. Exactly zero."

WHO WEARS SHORT SHORTS?...

Boston's newest venue for VVVIPs opened at the TD Banknorth Garden when Celtics owner Wyc Grousbeck and his wife, Corinne, hosted an exclusive debut party for the swanky and spankin' new Celtics Courtside Club, a pregame lounge for high rollers, complete with white banquettes and barstools made out of basketball leather.

Schmoozing and boozing before the Celtics got spanked by Phoenix were such A-listers as homeboy-gone-Hollywood Donnie Wahlberg and his wife, the babe-alicious Kim Fey, Celtics greats JoJo White and Robert Parrish, Red Sox superstar Jason Varitek and the gorgeous Karen, newsman Joe Shortsleeve, comedian Steve Sweeney, PR czar George Regan, WAAF morning mouth Greg Hill and his beautiful bride, Jennifer, Herald gossipeuse Laura Raposa, bachelor-about-town Jim Rushton, agent provocateur Cleon Daskalakis, sports marketing babes Kristen Kuliga and Soozie Lazenby, the team's beautiful new PR babe, Heather Walker, and others of an equally high-profile ilk.

Besides downing cocktails and devouring hors d'oeuvres, the party's most popular activity seemed to be ogling two of the team's new dancers, Whitney Gallagher and Courtney Kenihan, who were wea ing green hot pants that quickened qui a few pulses.



"I'd give anything to get my wife into pair of those," said one guest, while a other admiringly observed, "Those a hardly even pants. They're more like a aerosol ass covering."

YOU DON'T KNOW WHERE THOSE $1 BILLS HAVE BEEN...

Red is the new black, at least according t Combined Jewish Philanthropies, whic hosted its Red Carpet Affair at th Artists for Humanity EpiCenter i South Boston.

The super-cool party space was com pletely decked out in red décor, whil some of the resident artists dabbed a their easels and socialized with guests who included the disarmingly charmin Jessica Naddaff, smokingly hot blond Jill Winnick, the supremely stylis Courtney Daun, brunette beauty Am Belkin, super-cute chef Michael Levitan real estate scion Adam Weiner and hi stunning bride, Rita, TV reporter T.J Winick, painters Khaleela Willingha and Michael Guadarrama, recruite cutie Terri Dreier, business-school bab Jessica Zelfand, and one woman wh said, "I'm Hollywood chic. I'm not wear ing a dress and I'm not wearing black and I'm slightly underdressed for thi party."

However, the evening's most amusin remark came from the man who said, "Th last time I heard this song, I was getting lap dance." Perhaps a bit more informatio than anyone needed. IB

FOR THE GUYS

The guy half of the IMPROPER staff has been gaga for ultra-gorgeous model and Braintree native Melanie Cheskin since we began mocking up this issue's cover, and we're betting on the same reaction from male readers.

Now that we've got your attention, guys, we hope you'll stick around for the rest of the fun in this issue, written with your interests in mind. First, there's Ezra's second annual Testosterone Test, where four competitors face off in manly tests like wing eating and finding stuff at Home Depot. Can last year's winner defend his title? The competitive spirit continues in staffer Rich Levine's Playstation playoff against two real-life Celtics. Meanwhile, "A Dude's How-To" offers expert advice on how to get into the VIP section, score a hard-to-get reservation or buy a suit. Finally, our look at tequila will send you straight to the bar with a new respect for this awesome spirit.

BEAUTY AND THE BOARDROOM

In "It Hurts to Be Beautiful" (Jan. 10), the "boardroom babe" is apparently quite the corporate coquette, with her $450 bustier and $40–$80 bikini wax. One hates to dim the rose-colored glasses, but the babe/VP herself might offer a few detractions from her "Playboy Forum" description. More likely: That self-satisfied look in her eye comes from many a night studying for the GMAT ($250) and a successful career in business school ($50,000), where she was apparently taught how best to exhibit her breasts and tantalize sophomoric coworkers.

—NATHAN TANNER

THE COMMON'S LOSS...

I've enjoyed the IMPROPER for years. There's often a touch of whimsy and some irreverence that keeps things fresh. But I'd like to call your attention to the "It List" (Dec. 6). I disagree with the reference to the "Partisans" sculpture being "banished to a bus stop near the World Trade Center." A welcome addition to the neighborhood, its high-profile location lends it to being viewed by the many tenants of and visitors to this emerging business district.

—JAMES CARMODY

CONTRIBUTORS

MELANIE CHESKIN

Cover model and Braintree native Melanie Cheskin began her career at 15, when she was discovered by a neighbor who modeled in Boston. She signed with Ford modeling agency in New York and has been travelling the world for shoots ever since. Throughout her 12-year career, she's posed for Cover Girl with Nikki Taylor and Tyra Banks, as well as Givenchy, Christian Dior, Tommy Hilfiger, Polo and the Gap among others. Mother to a 20-month-old son and wife of a Massachusetts state trooper, she still resides on the South Shore. Look for her on TV in a new Crest teeth-whitening ad airing soon.

DENNIS FISHER

Dennis Fisher's writing has appeared in daily newspapers, in national magazines and on the Web for more than 10 years, including recent pieces in Marathon and Beyond magazines. He spent six years at PC Week (now eWeek) as a writer and editor, and he's currently the executive editor of the Security Media Group at TechTarget, whose publications include Searchsecurity.com and Information Security magazine. His first story for the IMPROPER, "A Dude's How-To," begins on page 31.

Get to the Point

Smooth-talking realtors and business journalists have long touted Fort Point Channel as the Next Gourmet Mecca, spinning vague, breathless tales of celebrity chefs "eyeing" this space or that for some (unconfirmed) concept sure to lure the city's foodies from their usual haunts. And so we waited.

And waited.

With a few exceptions (LTK Bar & Kitchen and the Westin's Sauciety), however, it remained all quiet on Boston's eastern front—foodwise—for what seemed like ages. But last month the machinery finally lurched into gear, when No. 9 Park's Barbara Lynch signed a 10-year lease on a whopping 14,700-square-foot Congress Street space for a restaurant slated to open at the end of this year. And in mid-January, around the corner on a tiny side street behind the Children's Museum, sweetsmonger Joanne Chang opened a second outpost of Flour, her South End bakery widely considered the best pastry game in town.

At 2,200 square feet, the new Flour could swallow its sibling whole and still have room for (more) dessert. Good thing, too: So popular is the Washington Street original that on busy days, a long line of retail customers jockeys for position with seated patrons. In the new digs, by contrast, the 45-seat café is set off comfortably to one side of the wide, unobstructed entryway, the path to the register flanked by built-in shelves bearing retail items like loaves of artisanal bread ($3-$3.50), day-old pastries (three for $2) and "Flour"-emblazoned mugs ($8, ceramic; $25, travel). The interior itself is an urban-dweller's dream of exposed brick, stainless-steel fixtures, lots of wood and cavernous, 15-foot ceilings. You'll toggle, torn, between two deadly sins: gluttony (for the pastries) and envy (for the primo loft space).

The generous space accommodates a roomy kitchen, giving Chang and her fellow pastry pros plenty of space to prep, mix and bake all manner of sweet and savory treats. Breakfast fare includes coffee and espresso drinks ($1.25-$2.95), croissants ($2.25), from-scratch pop tarts ($2.50), banana-walnut bread ($1.95), caramel-slathered sticky buns ($2.50) and sugar brioche buns ($2.50), made "with lots of butter and eggs." Lunchtime brings quiches, salads, soups and sandwiches (on fresh-made bread) filled with inventive combinations like roasted lamb, tomato chutney and goat cheese ($6.95) and hot grilled foccacia with chicken, brie and arugula ($6.95). For dessert, save room for Chang's cookies—like chewy ginger molasses ($1.25) and buttery raspberry streusel bars ($2.50)—or individual portions of the "ooey-gooey caramel nut" tart ($3.95) or her justly famous triple chocolate mousse cake ($4.95).

The open-kitchen configuration also proves the optimal pulpit for Chang to carry out her own merciless brand of guerrilla marketing. "Customers see, smell and hear everything that they're going to be eating," Chang says. "You can see the chefs—and you know that they're the ones making it." Flour Bakery + Café, 12 Farnsworth St., Boston (617-464-2500). —JH

Man Overboard!

Since 1989, Greg Hill has been the host of WAAF-107.3's popular "Hill-Man Morning Show," which airs weekdays from 5:30 to 10 am. Hill also serves as mayor of Mantown: not a physical place, really—more of an existentialist state of being that Hill considers "man's last refuge." From what? We haven't the faintest clue. In any case, we caught up with Hill to discuss all things manly.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: First off, what are three things that every Mantown needs?

Greg Hill: Well, you definitely need a big alternate HD/Plasma TV, some sort of activity that can lead to excessive drinking, like ping-pong or foosball, and then at least one valued piece of sports memorabilia.

IB: What's the most impressive part of your personal Mantown? You have gold-plated poker chips or something?

GH: I have a bunch of jerseys. I think my favorite is a signed Ted Johnson jersey from a couple years back.

IB: Do Mantowns still need a secret hiding spot for porn? Or is the whole point of Mantown that you don't need to hide it?

GH: I think you still need to be ready to hide it at a moment's notice. If you want a tip, you can put them in a different DVD case, like maybe Charlotte's Web.

IB: But wait, what happens if you're not home one day and your kid goes to pop Charlotte's Web into the DVD player?

GH: Yeah, you're right. It would probably be safer going with something like Driving Miss Daisy.

IB: How long before we hear of a Miss Mantown scandal on the level of Miss America?

GH: Considering we just had a Miss Mantown girl make an actual porno, I'm not sure it could get anymore scandalous. We're like the opposite of Miss America, we'd probably kick someone out if they became a teacher.

IB: Which Boston athlete do you think best represents the essence of Mantown?

GH: There's really no one that tough on the Bruins right now, so I'd probably say Tedy Bruschi or David Ortiz.

IB: This issue comes out the day after the Patriots/Colts game, so tell me: Are the Pats going to Miami?

GH: Absolutely. I would be shocked if they lost. We're already doing our show down there during Super Bowl week with [former NFL player] Tony Siragusa, so they've got to make it! —Rich Levine

IMPROPER SPEAKING

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Taco Trauma... South End social gatherings have been abuzz with the wretched news: The beloved, tender, crunchy, perfect-with-a-beer fish tacos have been banished from the menu at Picco! What were they thinking?! Turns out the loss is temporary: Owner Rick Katz assures us the tacos will reappear. "We wanted to change things up a bit during the winter months, when it's slower," Katz says, promising the delish dish will return by "late February, or early March at the latest." For now, make do with Picco's stellar pizza, paninis and homemade ice cream. Or just sit at the bar and cry into your lonely beer. 513 Tremont St., Boston (617-927-0066). www.piccorestaurant.com.

Frugal Finds... Has Boston's lofty cost of living always got you eyeing your next paycheck? The Cheap Bastard's Guide to Boston, part of a series published by Globe Pequot, may offer some relief, with more than 300 pages of tips for living on a budget in Beantown. Author Kris Frieswick points the way to freebies and discounts around the city, with info about free classes in sailing and yoga; getting into plays, films, concerts and museums at no cost; half-priced meals and free food; and where to get a free or discounted haircut. Frieswick even reveals where the city's best furnishings get trashed. "I was overwhelmed by how much really great free or obscenely cheap stuff is out there to find, with a little leg work," Frieswick says. All in the name of bargain hunting.

PaperChase... Former New York magazine designer Meghan Smith McPhail packed her bags and moved to Boston for a quieter lifestyle. And during the transition came the idea for Lee Leigh, an online stationery and invitation business. Specializing in party and wedding invitations, holiday cards and personalized letterhead, McPhail offers designs that are clean, modern and unique. Preppy stripes, snowflakes, simple hearts and flowers in pastel colors are some of the signature touches of her collection. Custom designs and one of-a-kind pieces are available as well. www.leeleigh.com.

FASH FLASH

Amenity, Amen

Men like the idea of having products just for them. But let's face it: They're lucky if they can remember to slap on aftershave, let alone follow a multistep skincare regimen. Still, their problems persist—red blotches, razor burn, ingrown hairs. Some guys ignore it, writing it off as part of the manly experience of shaving. However, even the toughest dudes have been known to sneak a squirt of moisturizer. Enter Amenity, a line of men's grooming products founded by Babson B-school grad Dwight Schultheis. Realizing he wasn't alone with his skin and shaving struggles ("I'm the average guy, and the average guy has tons of problems"), Schultheis created a line of doctor-developed, multifunctional products in practical, masculine packaging. The containers are made of sleek but substantial black, shatterproof plastic. Many are equipped with ergonomic dispensers with locking closures, which eliminate both the need to screw a top back on the bottle and the fear of gym-bag disasters. The system is based on three basic steps—clean, shave and moisturize—but the overall effect is far-reaching. The Gel Face Cleanser cleans and softens the beard, the Shave Cream moisturizes, and the After Shave soothes and combats wrinkles. C'mon guys: This you can handle. *www.getamenity.com. IMPROPER REPORTS

Who's Got the Biggest?

Let's be frank: When it comes to hot dogs, size does matter. After all, who wants to fork over hard-earned cash for a teeny weenie? In honor of the Man Issue, we sent our intrepid reporter around town to find out which gives you the most bang for your bun.

Hot Dog à la Maison

The Butcher Shop, 522 Tremont St.

Price: $14; Length: 6¼ inches; Girth: 5 inches; Weight: 5.85 ounces (after the cheese is scraped off); Appearance: light brown, slightly curved, engorged. The South End's fanciest meat purveyor sells its hot dog covered with Gruyère cheese and accompanied by cornichon pickles, making it look even bigger than it is—clever, but not necessary. This baby is so big you may need to nibble it horizontally, like an ear of corn.

The Naked Dog

Code 10, 1638 Washington St.

Price: $2.69; Length: 7 inches; Girth: 3¼ inches; Weight: 2.35 ounces; Appearance: slightly curved, bursting at the seams. For those who prefer their dogs dressed, the South End eatery offers chili, cheese and sauerkraut toppings. In case the standard isn't big enough, Code 10 also offers a quarter-pound dog (beef only).

The Fenway Frank

Lower Depths, 476 Comm. Ave.

Price: $1; Length: 5½ inches; Girth: 3⅜ inches; Weight: 2.3 ounces; Appearance: puckered, slightly charred, beer-bloated. Lower Depths sells the very same franks you can get at Fenway Park, from the same distributor, but these are soaked in beer. Takeout isn't allowed, so you'll have to down them right there at the bar with a good pint.

The Big Bite

7/11, multiple locations

Price: $1.09; Length: 5½ inches; Girth: 3 inches; Weight: 1.70 ounces; Appearance: smooth, pink, straight. The Big Bite is actually the smallest of the three hot dogs you can buy at the popular convenience store. Size queens may prefer the larger "Biggest Bite," a whopping 7⅜ inches long. Oh, thank heaven!

The Junkyard Dog

Spike's Junkyard Dogs, 1076 Boylston St.

Price: $2.99; Length: 6¼ inches; Girth: 3½ inches; Weight: 2.8 ounces; Appearance: reddish, smooth, split. Spike's standard Junkyard Dog comes with mustard, hot yellow peppers, tomato, pickle and chopped scallions. If you prefer your meat unencumbered, go for the "The Mutt," a plain dog, for $2.50.

TASTY TIDBITS

The Great Crêpe

Crêpe Expectations... Mr. Crêpe is back in Somerville. The eatery—which shut down operations at its Holland Street location back in 2004—reopened its doors in early January at the Davis Square address that used to house the Someday Café. Peter Creyf—part of the old Holland Street regime—is the man behind the new locale (along with husband-and-wife business partners Richard Adams and Ingrid Heyrman), which besides crêpes will serve up a selection of soups, salads and Leige-style Belgian waffles. And you could say that Creyf knows a thing or two about waffles—he's a staple in the kitchen at the popular Waffle Haus in Killington. 51 Davis Square, Somerville (617-623-0661).

Cheese and wine plates at Croma

A Menu Mix... After nearly seven years as general manager of Cambridge's Bombay Club, Syed Shabbir was ready to go out on his own, so in early December he opened up Grain and Salt on Cambridge Street in Allston. The restaurant actually has two menus, which offer a unique mix of authentic Pakistani/Indian food and casual Italian fare like pizzas and calzones. Shabbir says he's looking to attract the neighborhood's younger population. "There are a lot of college kids in this area," he tells us, "so along with the Indian and Pakistani menu, I also wanted to offer them a cheap, easy dining alternative." The dining room seats about 40, and items from both menus are available for take-out. 429 Cambridge St., Allston (617-254-3373).

Free for All... In the name of all things free and alcohol-related, we'd like to bring to your attention the Wednesday Wine Down—the new weekly wine event at Croma on Newbury Street. Each week, the classy pizza joint is offering complimentary wine tastings at its bar from 6 to 7 pm. New wines are featured each time, so if you're committed enough, you can probably get yourself a pretty wide array of intoxicating goodies. 269 Newbury St., Boston (617-247-3200). www.cromaboston.com.

Say Cheese... Husband-and-wife team John Pierce and Kathy Lacher made good on a longstanding dream this winter when they opened their own cheese shop—the Boston Cheese Cellar—in December on Birch Street in Roslindale Square. The shop has a menu of about 75 cheeses (although that number is sure to grow) and also features a selection of olive oils, crackers, condiments, specialty teas and more. 18 Birch St., Roslindale (617-522-8980). www.bostoncheesecellar.com. —RL

LOOK ON THE BRIGHT SIDE

A balmy winter prompts the question: Is global warming all bad?

As someone who despises the cold, I'm loving the winter of 2006-2007. December in Boston was the warmest on record. As I write this, the forecast is calling for a 65-degree day. I might play golf. In Boston. In January.

What's going on here? Since I can never accept good fortune at face value, I e-mailed my friend Wilson's dad, Breck, to get a dose of harsh reality on global warming. Breck is a scientist at the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute, and he designed a special torpedo that surfs the world's currents, radioing back data on seawater temperature and salinity. If anyone would have something to say about global warming, it's him. Wanna know what he told me?

Nothing. I haven't heard back from him yet. I have a theory on why he's incommunicado, but we'll get to that later. In the meantime, Wilson told me an ominous fact: His dad bought a Prius. Have you driven a Prius? That, to me, is a sign of a man who's seriously afraid of climate change.

Absent a reality check from Breck, I decided to blacken my mood by watching Al Gore's global-warming documentary, An Inconvenient Truth.

If there's one thing to take away from this movie, one piece of advice I can give you, it's this: If you're thinking of moving to Miami, you really ought to rent. Also, if you've never been to Venice, you might want to take care of that soon. At one point in the film, Gore shows what would happen if half of Greenland and half of the Antarctic ice shelves melted (which seems imminently possible). The oceans would rise 20 feet, flooding half of Florida and possibly leading Will Smith to record a new hit single, "Welcome to Orlando."

Gore says that the flooding caused by melting ice would displace something like 200 million people worldwide. Once I heard that, what do you think I did? Do you think I sat there idly on the couch, ignoring an issue that could ruin the lives of millions of people? Of course not. I immediately rushed to my computer and downloaded Google Earth to find out if my building would be OK. Don't worry; I'll be fine. According to Google Earth, my address is eight meters about sea level, which works out to 26.2 feet. So if Gore's right, I'm sitting on some future waterfront property here in South Boston, or, as I like to call it, South Boston Key. You can laugh all you want and tell me that's not going to happen, but we'll see who's laughing when you're not invited to my dock party.

One thing that disappointed me about An Inconvenient Truth, other than the irrefutable stack of data that portends an impending Dark Age, is the revelation of where the bulk of the responsibility lies. Personally, I like to blame the Chinese and their newfound, selfish affinity for cars over bicycles. I also blame those rascally South American poor people who don't appreciate their rain forests enough not to slash-and-burn them. But the biggest carbon dioxide producer in the world isn't China or North Korea or even Canada. It's us, me and you, Joe and Jill American.

It turns out America puts out the most greenhouse gases of any country, and by a wide margin. From this, I can only conclude that there is a direct correlation between greenhouse-gas production and a country's awesomeness. Naturally, all other countries want to be as awesome as us, so they're going to ramp up their greenhouse gas production until they get there. This is all so depressing that you might want to hold your breath till you die, but cheer up!

IF YOU'VE NEVER BEEN TO VENICE, YOU MIGHT WANT TO TAKE CARE OF THAT SOON

Al Gore says there's hope, because we Americans have a way of inventing solutions to our problems. When World War II needed to end, we invented nuclear bombs. When we needed to walk on the moon, we invented spaceships. When women needed to vote, we invented the right for women to vote. We're good like that, so we'll probably get around to inventing a way to reduce greenhouse gases.

This brings us back to my friend's dad, the scientist. I was surprised he never got back to me—that is, until I trained Google Earth on the Woods Hole offices down on the Cape. They're right on the water. Maximum elevation for most of the buildings: one meter. So I imagine Breck's pretty busy at the moment, shuttling all his gear to someplace, oh, at least 20 feet higher. Unfortunately, that'll probably take him a while. You can only fit so much in a Prius. IB

THE COLLINS CARD

BY CHRIS COLLINS

BEARISH ON THE 'PEN

Theo's new (old) credo: It's the relievers, stupid.

While we waited and waited—then waited some more—for J.D. Drew's contract to be finalized, Theo Epstein's mind was already focusing elsewhere. Before the annual springtime pilgrimage to the land of white hair, chain restaurants, questionable neighborhoods and, of course, palm trees, the Red Sox GM faced a familiar problem: the bullpen.

Yessiree, some things never change. Talk about an Achilles' heel: That one damn area has been Theo's personal "Big Dig" since taking over the team, just one headache after another. Fixing it has clearly been the bane of his tenure.

It started with that horrible experiment, the closer-by-committee system. Yes, there was some success later in 2003 and into that postseason—here we need not mention Grady Little anymore—and Keith Foulke was serviceable in 2004, but otherwise the Red Sox bullpen has basically been bull----. And as we look ahead to 2007, Theo's still trying to find guys who can come in late and finish the job.

The Young Guns, including Manny Delcarmen and Craig Hansen, haven't come along as quickly as we all hoped. At least they appear to be close, maintaining Theo's record of drafting players who can actually make it to the Show. (Indeed, when I congratulated him on his choices in last year's draft, he quipped, "We'll have a great team in 2012.") But Theo knows as well as anyone that the fans want a team that can win this year.

Well, Mr. Brookline is at it again. Every year we go through the same routine: Theo throws a bunch of relief pitchers against the wall, hoping one of them sticks. The list is long and undistinguished. (Remember Chad Fox and Matt Mantei? How about Rudy Seanez?) Many of them shared a common denominator—frailty and injuries. But Theo must feel the approach will work one of these years, because he keeps trying it. Color me skeptical.

The crazy thing is that I actually buy into it every year. The organization sells me on its focus in the off-season, which is always to acquire as many quality power arms as possible. And when they sign another journeyman pitcher to an incentive-laden contract and tell us he's going to get outs in the sixth, seventh or eighth innings, when they hold a press conference and unveil the new Red Sox home jersey, I become a sucker… I mean a believer.

Take this year as an example. I remember laughing when I first heard about the Joel Pineiro signing. But when they held the press conference on Yawkey Way, once assistant GM Jed Hoyer talked about the scouting report, it sounded logical. Pineiro allegedly possesses four power pitches. And when he talked about his new mindset, of giving it all he's got for one inning, and said that he's reached out to closers like Eddie Guardado and J.J. Putz, I started to believe that the missing piece to a strong Red Sox team had been found. "Yeah, baby," I remember thinking. "This guy may be the answer."

And then I regained my senses. Several million New Englanders are willing to give Pineiro a shot, and I'm not ready to praise or rip the move. But it does seem odd that a guy who struggled so much in Seattle during 2006 is slated to be The Man in Boston in 2007.

So once again, the bullpen could very well be a disaster and ruin a lot of Theo's good work in other departments. Forget about the money—I like J.D. Drew and Julio Lugo. Both will make the Sox better in 2007. But neither is as important as who's standing on the mound at the end of the game.

> NEITHER J.D. DREW NOR JULIO LUGO IS AS IMPORTANT AS WHO'S ON THE MOUND AT THE END OF A GAME

It's nearly impossible to figure out who your stopper is in spring training, because of the lackluster nature of the exhibition games. It's going to take some time in the regular season, maybe the entire month of April, to figure out who (if anyone) has what it takes to give us anything remotely close to what Jonathan Papelbon did last year.

In fact, I have a strong feeling that the search for a closer needs to start closer to home. If this team is as good as I think it can be, and if returning to the playoffs and contending for a title is a real possibility, which I believe it is, maybe the new Sox closer should be the old Sox closer. Soroff ON

GLORIA STEINEM

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Legendary activist Gloria Steinem was born in Toledo, Ohio, and graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Smith College in 1956. After studying in India for two years, she returned to the U.S. and became an assistant editor of Help! magazine. In 1963, she went undercover to investigate the lives of Playboy bunnies, penning A Bunny's Tale: "Show's" First Exposé for Intelligent People, which created a sensation. She also worked as a contributor for NBC's That Was The Week That Was. A stint covering George McGovern's political campaign led to a position at New York magazine, and as she became increasingly active in the women's rights movement, the media began to treat her as the public face of feminism. In 1971, she cofounded the National Women's Political Caucus and the Women's Action Alliance, and in 1972 she launched Ms. magazine, on whose masthead she remains. In 1993, she was inducted into the National Women's Hall of Fame. In 2000, she married David Bale (father of actor Christian) in a ceremony performed by Wilma Mankiller, the first female chief of the Cherokee Nation. Bale died in 2003. Recently, she's taken up the fight against modern slavery, penning the foreword to Enslaved: True Stories of Modern Day Slavery, which was released last October. We caught up with her on a recent visit to Boston to promote both the cause and the book. She lives in New York.

Jonathan Soroff: OK, first of all: What does a burning bra smell like?

Gloria Steinem: Ah, since no bra was ever burned, I don't know. What happened at the Miss America contest protest was that a group of early feminists threw symbols of stereotypical femininity into a trash can on the boardwalk in Atlantic City—aprons, dust mops, bras, steno pads and so on. They were going to burn them, but they couldn't get a fire permit, so they never did.

JS: You're still hot at 72. Do you feel it?

GS: No. I feel better than that. I don't think hot and cool are necessary adjectives for people.

JS: Was it ever annoying to you that some people paid attention to what you said because you were sexy?

GS: It was. I came to feel that no matter how hard I worked and how long, what I accomplished would be attributed to my [illegible], and that was very painful.

JS: Would you still call yourself a radical?

GS: Yes, because radical means going to the root of a problem.

JS: If you had to identify the most galvanizing experience that turned you into who you are, what would it be?

GS: That's hard. What turned me into an activist was going to an abortion hearing during Roe v. Wade. I was a reporter for New York magazine, and it was a hearing on whether or not to liberalize the New York state abortion law, to which 14 men and one nun were invited. [Laughs.] So a group of early feminists decided to hold their own hearing at a church basement in New York, and I went to cover it.

"I THINK THAT MEN WOULD PREFER NOT TO LIVE IN A CULTURE WHERE ONLY ONE PART OF THEM IS THOUGHT TO BE IMPORTANT."

JS: In Sudan, buying a cow costs less than buying the freedom of an enslaved woman. What's your visceral reaction to that?

GS: I don't think it needs the comparison to a cow to have the reaction that people are not inanimate objects, that they belong only to themselves, and that to be treated as chattel is the ultimate lie and degradation.

JS: Woman you admire most?

GS: If you forced me to pick just one, I'd have to choose either Alice Walker or Wilma Mankiller.

JS: Man who you think embodies the most positive female traits?

GS: John Lennon was right up there. Gandhi had some big blind spots, but at least he stole women's tactics of nonviolence. [Laughs.]

JS: So is the penis overrated?

GS: No part of the human body is overrated, but I think that men would prefer not to live in a culture where only one part of them is thought to be important.

JS: One thing men are better at than women?

GS: I don't think we know, because we live in a culture that so bifurcates human qualities that we don't know who we might be in a natural state.

JS: Can a woman have it all: career, motherhood, etc.?

GS: Well, women will never be able to have it all until men have it all, meaning raising little babies as much as anyone else, etc. So as long as having it all for women means doing it all, no.

JS: I've heard the saying, "You can have it all, just not at the same time."

GS: Yes, well, that's still an answer that doesn't acknowledge that men are parents, too—that men who eat can also cook. [Laughs.]

JS: Any thoughts on women who don't shave their armpits or legs?

GS: None, except congratulations because they're going against the current dictates.

JS: Do you subscribe to Cosmo?

GS: No. But I did write for Cosmo before Helen Gurley Brown. I wrote about the Beatles when they first came to this country.

JS: Pornography that's produced by women—is it any different?

GS: Yeah, it's mostly not pornography. It's erotica. It's important to differentiate between those two words. It's important to say rape is not sex. It's violence. It's important to say pornography is not erotica. Porne in Greek means female slaves. Erotica comes from eros, which means love and has some connotation of mutual pleasure and free choice, which is very different.

JS: So that's more acceptable than, say, Playboy*?*

GS: Yes, because Playboy is entirely about male superiority. It may be soft-core pornography, but it's still not about equality and mutual pleasure. I'm not saying it's not possible for a woman to produce pornography if she's a masochist or a sadist, but it's as unusual as it would be for a black person to produce racist literature or a Jewish person to produce anti-Semitism.

JS: Did you ever go to the Playboy mansion?

GS: Yes, to interview Hefner.

JS: Never to parties?

GS: No. Too many women have told me what goes on there—women forced to have sex with animals, things like that.

JS: At this point, what's your take on Hefner?

GS: Well, he's always been a joke, but now he's pathetic.

JS: One adjective to describe the Jessica Simpsons and Britney Spears of our culture?

GS: They're playing the game that's been given to them. And I'm sure it appears to them to be the only game in town. The game is the problem, not the players.

JS: Does Ann Coulter deserve to be horsewhipped?

GS: No. I'm delighted to see her. She's so ineffective and crazy and full of violence that sometimes people ask me if I pay her to represent the right wing.

JS: Do you feel that the social and political movements of the '60s and '70s worked?

GS: Yes, and they're still working. To really have an effect, a movement has to last at least a century. Think about the suffragettes or abortion [activists]. They started out about 100 years ago, and those goals have been realized.

JS: Any thoughts on Barbie?

GS: I think it's a bit like white dresses at weddings. If you didn't know that white symbolizes virginity and you might get killed if you weren't, or couldn't reproduce, you might just think it was a pretty dress. And with Barbie, if you don't know that it was modeled after a pornographic doll in Germany and the rest of its terrible history, it might seem innocuous.

JS: Last question: Will we have a female president in 2008?

GS: I don't know, but the important thing is that we have a feminist president. It's about consciousness, not biology. IB

Can You Go Back To College For Just One Day?

YES.

ONE DAY UNIVERSITY

Saturday, February 10, 2007

We've Gathered Award Winning Professors From Harvard, Yale, Brown, Columbia and Cornell and Created the Most Stimulating Day of College Available Anywhere on Earth.

Location: Newton, Massachusetts
Mount Ida College - 777 Dedham Street

Can't make it in February? We've just added a second date with all new professors - April 29th.

Only 68 Seats Remain For this Unique, Live, Classroom Experience. Don't Get Closed Out!

Welcome to One Day University, a fresh opportunity for professionals, people in their prime, retirees, and even recent grads, who feel nostalgic for when life was more about learning than job performance. We've brought together five of the country's brightest professors from the world's finest universities to offer you a memorable, live classroom experience.

One Day University brings celebrated educators and their star courses to you. This unique full-day experience is for students who believe that learning should be by degrees—and not just about acquiring them. On February 10th you can explore new topics the way you did in college, but without homework assignments or final exams! Think of us as an Ivy League education condensed into one energetic day.

Remember When Learning Was Fun?

Our single purpose is simple: Personal Enrichment. At One Day University you won't learn how to run a business, lose weight, or make millions in real estate. You will, however, rediscover the joys of exercising your brain.

The MAN Issue

The Ultimate Testosterone Test II

Four guys compete for the title of Manliest Man in THE SECOND ANNUAL IMPROPER BOSTONIAN SKILLS CHALLENGE.

PICTURES MICHAEL MALYSZKO

Last year, the IMPROPER hosted a contest to find the manliest man in all the land—or at least, the manliest man who would submit to my grueling all-day testosterone test. Five guys assembled IKEA dressers, threw a football at a target, devoured spaghetti laced with Dave's Insanity Sauce, hammered nails and answered sports trivia. At the end of the day, triumph belonged to a man named Tim, who was crowned the champion.

However, like the Super Bowl winner, the victor of the contest possesses the crown for one year only. Thus, for this year's challenge, Tim faces a new lineup of major meatheads looking to capture the glory.

The Competitors

THIS YEAR OUR FIRST CHALLENGER is Anthony, an Eastie native who, if he so wished, could get former Patriots tight end Jermaine Wiggins to beat you up. (I made that up, actually, but I just assume that everyone in Eastie is tight with their boy Jermaine.) Anthony works out at 5 am everyday, which makes him either manly or insane—in any case, a perfect candidate for this contest.

Sean hails from a part of rural Pennsylvania that he calls "redneck country." A former kayak guide, Sean enjoys playing a game with his friends called "Eat it or Drink It." Players in this game must open a refrigerator and eat or drink any item chosen by the others. But doesn't this game result in people getting sick? "All the time," says Sean. "It never stopped us."

Our next competitor, Mike, plays hockey with Tim in a men's league. Mike is a goalie, which means that he likes to spend his spare time having angry men on sharpened blades fire hard rubber projectiles at his head. Not only that, but Mike's day job involves the Air Force and occasionally requires him to climb into nuclear missile silos. I'd tell you more, but then Mike would have to kill me.

Finally, we have Tim, the reigning champion. Since last year's victory, Tim has trained hard and worked on increasing his manliness even further. For example, since last year's contest, Tim has caused a pregnancy. Fortunately, it was in his wife. What, I ask you, is more manly than putting a bun in the oven? Sonograms have revealed that Tim's child is already attempting to purchase a big-screen TV, which doctors say is an indication that it's a boy.

SO THAT'S OUR CREW. Now, what sort of travails are in store for them this time around? We'll get warmed up with some sports trivia—this year we're narrowing the field to '80s sports trivia, which means many of the questions should involve guys with mustaches. Next we'll see who can do the most biceps curls, because if you don't have good pythons you're never going to get the crowd's attention when you do the Hulk Hogan "I can't hear you" move. After the curls, we'll test the guys' working knowledge of Home Depot with a scavenger hunt. Then it's the car-sabotage event, where I'll disable a car and each guy has to fix it. Last, and certainly not least disgusting, comes the buffalo wing–eating contest. Can anyone consume more than a pound of chicken in three minutes? There's only one way to find out. The guys meet at my apartment early on a Saturday morning. Let the games begin.

Clockwise from top: Mike, Anthony, Tim and Sean battle it out lifting weights, fixing cars and eating wings.

The Riddle of Ivan Lendl

IF YOU THINK THAT '80S Trivial Pursuit would somehow be easier than any other edition, you're as wrong as Punky Brewster's friend Cherie when she decided to hide inside that old refrigerator. The first question I draw is, "What tennis star played in eight straight U.S. Open finals, starting in 1982?" The answer is Ivan Lendl. Now there's a name that leaps right to the tip of the tongue. If all 15 of the questions are like this, we might end up with a four-way tie, with zero correct answers all the way around.

Tim pulls out to an early lead when he remembers how many lanes of traffic the frog had to cross on each screen of Frogger (five). There are some protests that playing Frogger isn't actually a sport, but I remind everyone that the category is technically called "Sports and Leisure," and Frogger is definitely either one or the other of those. Besides, nobody complains about the next question, "What action figures came in subgroups like Autobots, Dinobots and Predacons?" I'm proud to say that everyone gets that one right. Sorry if now you've got the Transformers theme music stuck in your head.

A few cards later, a Boston-centric question comes up, but three out of four guys think it was Bill Laimbeer who threw the inbound pass stolen by Larry Bird in the 1987 Eastern Conference finals. Only Tim comes up with the correct answer, the NBA gift that keeps on giving, Isiah Thomas.

Other than the Transformers query, there's only one other question that all four guys ace, and it's a great one: "What treasured sports icon, banged up when Mark Messier brought it onstage at a strip club, was carted to an auto body shop for repairs?" Wow—in that one question, we have a treasured sports icon, a strip club, an auto body shop and a Canadian NHL player nicknamed

Tim (above, far right)takes an early lead in the sports trivia contest, but he comes in third in the weight-lifting challenge (bottom right).

"Moose." That might be the manliest question ever written for Trivial Pursuit. The answer, of course, is the Stanley Cup, although I hope that in the future, "Ultimate Testosterone Test trophy" might also become a correct answer to that particular question.

After 15 cards, I ask a bonus question. "Since it's important as a guy to be familiar with the cultural habits of women, I have one estrogen-heavy question for you," I say. "What is the name of Megan Mullally's housekeeper on Will & Grace?" Everyone groans, but three out of four guys had at least a basic idea of the answer, with "Rose," "Rosa" and "Rosario." Only one guy, Sean, realizes the question is a trick, and that even if your girlfriend ropes you into watching Will & Grace, you shouldn't be paying attention to it. Sean writes, "Refuse to answer this question," which I score as a correct answer.

When I tally up the answer sheets, Tim is off to an early lead, going 7-for-15 on the trivia, with Sean coming in second with six correct answers. Now that we're limbered up, let's pump some iron.

Nine Hundred Ninety-Nine!... A Thousand!

THERE'S SNICKERING amongst the fellas when I break out the dumbbells, for these are mere 12.5-pound weights. From the look of them, Bill Gates could crank a couple hundred reps without feeling a burn.

But there's a funny thing about light weight—it gets heavy in a hurry. I allot each guy two minutes to do as many curls as he can, and frankly I have no idea how this will play out. Sean goes first, and I ask him if he plans to keep an even pace or go as fast as possible the whole time. "I have no strategy whatsoever," he replies. "I just rolled out of bed."

Sean's looking good until about a minute in, when he starts to turn red. He keeps going, but after he gets past 50 reps he slows way down. After 56 curls, his time is up.

It's Tim's turn. His first comment is, "These are heavier than I thought." Indeed. At rep 42, Tim starts to look as if he's curling life-size bronzes of James Gandolfini. "That's where you hit the wall!" he says, adding, "Right arm: dead. Gotta take a break." Tim manages to squeeze out 60 reps, edging his way into the lead.

Anthony's up next, and right away he sets a furious pace. Sean looks worried, commenting, "Ouch. I think he actually knows what he's doing." Almost a minute in, Anthony's keeping up the pace. As the two-minute mark approaches, Anthony starts grunting, which is causing my dog to attack him. When the watch stops, Anthony is our new leader, cranking out 88 curls.

Mike goes last, and thanks to Anthony the bar's set severely high. Mike begins curling, a look of supreme focus coming over his face. He's got the thousand-yard stare going a little bit. "He was a joker when we were all going, but now he's as serious as can be," Tim notes. When time runs out, I turn to our independent panel of curl-counters (i.e., wives and girlfriends), who all agree on Mike's number: 105 curls in 120 seconds. Wow. We're only two events in, but it's looking like Tim's title is definitely up for grabs.

You Can Do It. We Can Help You Find a 10-Inch Nipple.

I GATHER THE GUYS outside the Home Depot at the South Bay Center and lay down the rules for our scavenger hunt. A few days earlier, I'd scouted this location and selected items that would be very embarrassing to ask for help finding. The list includes: an epoxy called "Crack Fix"; a pole pruner; a 10-inch nipple; Caulk-B-Gone latex caulk remover; Briggs and Stratton penetrating oil; and a product called "Rainbow Flame Crystals" that, according to its label, promises to "provide a fiesta of dancing blue and green flames to your next wood fire!"

I'm really excited for the possibilities here. Besides measuring our contestants' innate knowledge of Home Depot's layout, there's an excellent chance that some wild-eyed guy will approach a Home Depot associate and demand to know where he can find his crack fix. Yes, only in Home Depot can you approach a large man wearing an apron and ask, "Can you show me your nipples?" and he'll reply, "Follow me. They're in plumbing."

Everyone races off armed with a bucket. I'd expected the guys to go it alone and ask for help only as a last resort, but within two minutes I see Mike talking to two Home Depot guys. I can hear him say the words "pole pruner." Excellent.

Anthony asks where he can find the flame crystals and Caulk-B-Gone, a request that draws an indignant "You trying to be funny?" Mike continues to solicit help with everything, approaching another Home Depot employee and getting right to the point with, "Hey buddy, where are all the nipples?" Tim asks for help finding both the nipple and the penetrating oil, and the Home Depot guy naturally assumes that there's a connection between the two. After Tim asks for the oil, his helper replies, "Oh yeah, that goes on your nipple, right?"

I could listen to these sorts of interactions all day, but after 19 minutes and 30 seconds, Tim and Anthony simultaneously stride up with all the items on the list. Sean checks in a couple minutes later, followed by Mike. Despite his last-place finish, Mike is in good spirits, saying, "Asking for the flame crystals was the highlight of my day."

Listen All of Y'all It's a Sabotage

WHEN CONFRONTed with a non-running automobile, men follow a tried-and-true routine: Pop the hood, fiddle with a few wires, then call AAA. There's one exception to this rule, though. Any guy should recognize that if a car doesn't crank over, the battery is the first suspect. So my sabotage, effected on a 2007 Honda CR-V, is merely to disconnect the battery. The guys will have to try starting the car, confirm it's dead, pop the hood, fix the problem and start the car. Simple challenge, right? So it would seem.

Mike goes first. After confirming the lifeless motor, he sets about trying to pop the hood. And herein lies the rub: The 2007 CR-V has the best-hidden hood release flap I've seen in quite a while. Like most hood releases, the CR-V's is in the driver's side footwell, but it's recessed, invisible unless you actually stick your head down near the pedals and look to the left. Mike can't find it.

The gas flap pops open. Nope, that's not it. After four minutes, I give him a hint: "It is where you'd think it would be." Once he finds the hood release, it's only 30 seconds until he has the battery reconnected and the car started. But the hood killed him.

Sean's up next. After a minute and 20 seconds of fruitlessly searching for the hood release, he breaks out the owner's manual. At 1:50, the hood is open. Sean has some trouble with the prop rod, but in two minutes and 30 seconds he's got the CR-V running. I'm not sure how I feel about his busting out the owner's manual. On one hand, that seems like cheating; under normal circumstances, no guy ever reads a car's owner's manual, even if he's upside down in a ravine and bears are approaching and he can't figure out how to roll down the windows. On the other hand, I didn't forbid it, and taking maximum advantage of the rules is to be admired. But would 2:30 be fast enough to best Tim and Anthony?

"Ouch. I think he actually knows what he's doing."

Top to bottom: Anthony heads out in search of his Crack Fix and a 10-inch nipple on the Home Depot Scavenger Hunt... and wolfs down 13.5 ounces of buffalo wings in three minutes. The crafty Sean starts the Honda after consulting the owner's manual in the automobile sabotage.

Anthony starts off the same way as Mike and Sean, baffled by the CR-V's hidden hood release. Thirty seconds in, he says, "I can't find the hood. No good." But seven seconds later, he gets it—a new record. At 50 seconds, the hood is open, but Anthony is overthinking the problem and glances over the battery without realizing the positive terminal is loose. Still, at just past two minutes he's got it started and is our new leader.

This leaves Tim. As Tim walks into the parking lot, I say, "I think you have an advantage here, because you have a CR-V." Accusing a guy of CR-V ownership puts him on the defensive, and Tim fires back, "That's the wife's car." At any rate, Tim's CR-V doesn't give him any advantage, because the secret hood release is a new feature on the 2007 model, and Tim's is a 2005. Initially, he can't pop the hood, either. Nice work, Honda! You've even outsmarted a Honda owner.

But at 37 seconds he finds the release lever, and from there on out he scorches, starting the car after barely a minute's elapsed. The reigning champion isn't going down without a fight.

Ain't No Thang but 21 TGI Friday's Buffalo Wings

IN INTERNATIONAL FEDERation of Competitive Eating parlance, we're holding what's known as a "debris" event. As opposed to the most famous annual eating contest, wherein a skinny Japanese guy named Kobayashi eats enough hot dogs to kill a small family, we're working with bone-in Buffalo wings, so you can't simply count how many of them someone eats. What you do—and this is way more manly and disgusting—is weigh each competitor's plate before and after the competition. Whoever devours the most meat, by weight, is the winner.

At the center of the table rests a digital kitchen scale with built-in timer. In front of each contestant sits a full "party size" box of TGI Friday's Buffalo wings. If you're wondering, the box contains about 30 wings. Mmmm, mmmm.

After distributing wings and ensuring everyone starts within an ounce of one another, I set the timer to three minutes and give everyone either water or an ice-cold Schlitz. The water would probably be better, in terms of not getting too full," opines Mike, "but then you wouldn't get the golden burp."

I start the timer and the carnage begins. Mike and Anthony seem to be the early leaders, but it's hard to tell. Sean seems to be eating each wing too carefully, getting all the meat off of each one as if he were in a restaurant, so I advise that maybe he should just eat each one quick and then go back later to clean up—sort of like answering all the easy questions first on the SATs. "Good advice, Ezra," he deadpans, making it clear that the guy in the stands shouldn't dispense wisdom to the players on the field. Fair enough.

As the buzzer nears, Anthony and Mike are both nearing the end of their wing supply. Anthony's eaten a few more, but Mike seems to have picked his clean. Only the scale knows the victor, but I'm impressed before I even see the official numbers—21 wings in three minutes strikes me as pretty solid.

The plates hit the scale and Sean, who appeared to be the slowest, nonetheless ingested more than a half-pound of meat in three minutes. Tim, who quietly plugged along while Anthony and Mike battled one another, checks in with 15.2 ounces of damage—nearly a full pound.

Anthony, while getting a hand on every wing on his plate, misses Tim's mark by about two ounces, finishing with a still-sickening 13.35 ounces of TGI goodness in his belly. It's up to Mike to go biggest, or else Tim will surely have a lock on the entire competition. Mike's plate goes on the scale, and it's a shocker: He ate 16.2 ounces, more than a pound, of wing meat in three minutes.

Mike seems appalled by himself, yet also impressed. "A pound of wings in three minutes… that's filthy," he says. He doesn't clarify whether he means "filthy" in the traditional sense or "filthy" in the hyperbolic, athletic sense. I think both meanings apply.

Mike seems appalled by himself, yet also impressed. "A pound of wings in three minutes. That's filthy."

And the Winner Is…

LAST YEAR I RANKED the contestants, first through last. This year I'm not doing that, because every guy knows second place is first loser and if you're not the lead dog, the view never changes. The revered Ultimate Testosterone Test trophy is known as the Golden Hardhat, so-named because it's a silver hardhat. Featuring a Patriots logo and OSHA-approved, it's something every guy should rightly covet. In addition to this, I fashioned a sash out of yellow safety tape. I expect the winner to wear both items at all times, even while swimming or running with the bulls, until next year.

I tally up the votes golf-style, according to each guy's finish in each contest—lowest score wins. Mike, who finished first in both the wing eating and curls, seems like an early favorite. But last-place finishes in the car sabotage and trivia hurt his score. Anthony and Sean didn't dominate any one event, but both were solid across the board. This brings us to Tim.

Last year's champ threw down first-place finishes in trivia, the scavenger hunt and car-fixin'. Combined with his second-place wing-devouring performance and third in the curls, it all adds up to a Golden Hardhat and a growing crowd of vanquished competitors for the mighty Tim.

And now, in accordance with the New England Patriots Act and the Tom Brady Bill, all men in the Boston area are required to call sports radio stations for the next year and argue whether Tim should be considered a dynasty or whether he needs another title to become more than just a very good Tim. Sully from Brighton, you're on the air. iB

The MAN Issue

A Dude's How-To

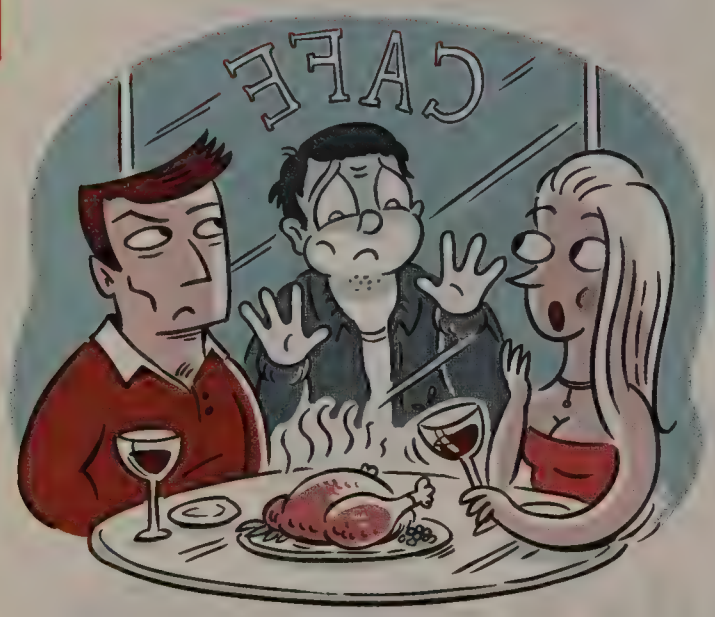
What every Bostonian with a Y chromosome should know.

WORDS DENNIS FISHER PICTURES BOB FLYNN

FAT, DRUNK AND STUPID IS NO WAY TO GO THROUGH LIFE, SON. Or so said Dean Wormer. The first two are up to you to fix, but in the spirit of fraternity, we're here to help you with the "stupid" part. Men are naturally inquisitive folk who, when presented with a new gadget or beer, will instinctively try to open it and see what's inside. You want to know what makes things tick, how to fix them if they're broken and how to get a good deal on new ones when the old ones get fried. Guy stuff. So here's a handy primer on how to do a few things that every well-rounded Boston man should be able to handle. After all, as the Faber College motto says: Knowledge is good.

BUYING A SUIT



Time was, dressing for work meant one thing for most men: a suit. Any man showing up at the office in slacks, khakis or—god help him—jeans, was presumed to have been separated from his wardrobe by either an angry wife, a locust infestation or some comparable disaster. That standard disappeared right around the time Silicon Valley replaced Wall Street as the center of the business world, which means there's a whole generation of men who couldn't buy a suit on a dare.

Sorry, size does matter.

Never fear. Paul Wade, a sales consultant at Louis Boston who's been selling fine suits since you were in Underoos, can help. His best advice:

- Try on several different styles and cuts, and find one that not only looks great but feels it, too. "If you're used to jeans, you want something that's comfortable or you won't wear it," Wade says.
- When it comes to color, less is more. So go for either a solid color or a subtle pattern. Leave the bright checks and chalk stripes to Deion Sanders and Stuart Scott.
- Focus on the cut of the jacket, particularly the fit through the shoulders and back. Snug pants or slightly long sleeves can be fixed. "But the shoulders and back can't be let out or brought in easily after the fact," Wade cautions. "Tailors are good, but they're not magicians."
- If you have questions about a suit's provenance, check the padding in the chest and shoulders and look for puckering in the fabric of the suit. Stiff padding and gathering are dead giveaways of glued-in padding, common in lower-quality suits.
- Expect to spend about a week's salary for a good-quality, finely tailored suit, Wade says. "You really can't get a good one for under $1,200 these days."

GETTING A TABLE

Getting a table at a hot restaurant is much more art than science, but the best bet here is common sense and common courtesy. The old standbys of slipping a 20 to the maitre d' or trying to convince the naïve-looking hostess that you really are Todd English's cousin's nephew don't cut it these days. Instead, try appealing to the staff's sense of humor or compassion.

The thing to do, says Christopher Myers, one of the owners of Radius, Via Matta and Great Bay, is something self-deprecating. "I've done this myself. Call and say, 'Look I know I'm an idiot and you're insanely busy, but it's my anniversary and I have nowhere to take my wife. Here's my cell number. Could you put me at the top of the waitlist?' Putting yourself at their mercy works," Myers says.

Another tip: Make a late reservation, say 9:30 or 10 pm, and go out for cocktails beforehand. Boston is still a tradition-bound city in many ways, and most people want to eat by 9 pm at the latest. "You can eat anywhere you want at 10, and usually the service is better because the rush is over," says Rich Cobb, a South End resident who owns a Boston design firm.

CORRECT: "Fruity, yet tannic."
INCORRECT: "Whoever smelt it dealt it."

SELECTING A WINE

Congratulations. You landed the job and have your first big client meeting. Now how do you prevent yourself from sweating like Paris Hilton in church when the waiter hands you the wine list? Some basic wine intelligence is no longer just a way to impress your father-in-law; it's a requirement. So next time you have a big date or important business dinner, follow Myers' simple steps for oenological success.

Myers, also a trained sommelier (that's the wine guy at the restaurant), suggests checking out the restaurant's wine list online a couple of days before your meal. Decide how much you'd like to spend, and then look at the selections in that price range. If you need specific information, don't be afraid to call the restaurant and ask to speak with the wine director or owner. That's what they're there for. "The competition is so keen in our business, you can't be a jerk and survive. Anyone in the restaurant should be able to help," Myers says.

Before you order, ask the people at your table what type of wine they prefer. If you end up with a bunch of preferences, go for a middle-of-the-road choice like pinot noir. If the waiter offers you the cork, just be sure it's damp. Above all, don't be intimidated or scared to ask for help. "There are no hard and fast rules. Drink what you like," says Myers.

Buying a Car

Just thinking about starting the car-buying process is enough to give grown men night sweats. Unless you're paying cash for that new Mercedes SL 65 AMG and money is no object, you need to have a plan when you hit the showroom. Here are the keys to doing battle with your local dealer:

With prices this low, he must be crazy! (And if you're still not convinced, check out that sport coat.)

▸ Do your homework. Invoice prices, costs for option packages and every other detail you need are readily available online at sites like Edmunds.com and Cars.com. Know what the dealer paid before deciding what you'll pay. Do the same with your trade at Kbb.com.

▸ Don't take the 0 percent financing if there's a rebate available instead. For example, suppose you're buying a $20,000 car and the dealer offers a $3,000 rebate or 0 percent APR financing. If you take the rebate and then finance the remaining $17,000 at 6.6 percent (which is the going rate these days) over five years, your final cost over the life of the loan works out to almost exactly $20,000. So it's essentially a wash, and the rebate also counts as a cash down payment in the eyes of lenders, helping your cause for a loan.

▸ Do buy the extended warranty. "A 36,000-mile warranty is really two years these days with how much people drive, not three years. And a 100,000-mile powertrain warranty means nothing. The problems are caused by the air conditioning compressor and all the stuff besides the powertrain," says Jim Ziegler, an Atlanta-based automotive consultant.

▸ Don't be a sucker. You don't have to buy just because you're in the finance office and Wayne the Sales Guy has invested 35 whole minutes in you. If it doesn't feel right, walk.

LESSON: It's OK to waste the sales guy's time. It's not OK to waste your money.

Qualifying for the Boston Marathon

Another year, another resolution to get fit. But this time, instead of dropping $1,500 on a treadmill, you sank six shots of añejo and bet your buddy you could run the Boston Marathon. Right on. But there's the small matter of getting into the race, which requires a qualifying time. Sure, you could run as a bandit, but if you're going to put in all the training, why line up with the guy dressed like a tree and the BU fraternity pledges? You want that finisher's medal.

Aside from running a qualifying time of 3:10 before March, there are two other ways to get an official number. First, you can apply to one—or several—of the charities to which the Boston Athletic Association grants entry waivers each year. In return for the waiver, you pledge to raise money—a minimum of $3,000 for official charities. The downside is, most of those spots fill up by December. Your other, lesser-known option is to join one of the big running clubs in the area. The BAA also gives a handful of waivers to about eight or 10 of the most active clubs around Boston, meant to be used by competitive runners who weren't able to qualify that year. Often the numbers are handed out in order of seniority in the club, but hey, maybe you could trade that nice treadmill you bought last year for a bump in line.

Even Rosie Ruiz qualified. Sort of.

Scoring Red Sox Tickets

Sure, the Red Sox have sold out every game since forever, so how come C-lister Ben Affleck can always get tickets when the Yankees are in town? Because it's all about who you know. And Affleck's wife is famous, so she gets him in. For the rest of us, there are a few options aside from the hawkers on Brookline Ave. and eBay.

The best and most economical choice is Red Sox Replay, a members-only site where season-ticket holders sell tickets they can't use for face value. Anyone can subscribe for $49.95 a year, or if you know someone with season tickets, you can log on for free through their account. If you don't find what you need there and have a little time on your hands, head down to Fenway. The Sox release some tickets every game day, but the line forms early at the window on Lansdowne. It can be a long wait for nothing.

But if you don't mind missing a half-inning or so, try trolling the area bars. Ticket brokers are usually desperate to move their seats by the time of the first pitch, so you can usually pick up tickets at face value or even less if you're patient. Another trick, which might be a bit distasteful, is to befriend fans of rival teams. Boston is lousy with closet fans of the Yankees, Orioles and other teams, and they often buy up seats for when their teams come to town. Hold your nose and ask around.

"I buy a bunch of tickets every year, and not just for Yankees games. I love baseball, so I go to a lot of games," says Tim Whitman, a Long Island transplant and die-hard Yankees fan. "I can never go to all of them, and a lot of times I'll trade them with Sox fans."

Also, check with your buddies who work at big companies in town. They often have season tickets, and many of them go to waste because some VP decides not to go to a Tuesday night game against the Royals. It's not Sox-Yanks, but the seats might be close enough for you to taunt Affleck with Matt Damon's box office grosses. IB

BECOMING A VIP

All it takes is one peek behind the velvet curtain, one little glimpse of the bottles of Cristal lined up on the table like $400 bowling pins, and you're hooked. You have to find a way into the VIP section. Unless you're tight with Big Papi or Joseph Abboud, the key to getting the VIP treatment at Boston clubs is simple, clubgoers say: money.

If you don't have friends in high places, make nice with the muscle.

But how and to whom you hand out cash is the real secret. Before you try to stuff a 50 in the bouncer's shirt pocket on a packed Saturday night, hit the club several times on slower nights, like Wednesday and Thursday. Become known as a regular who tips well and spends some money. Chat up the guys working the door so they'll remember your face and put in a word for you with the floor staff. But be prepared to pay for your trip to the Champagne Room. There's typically a flat fee for a table, as well as requirements that you pay for bottle service once you're in. That can run you another $200 or more per bottle.

Also, check out the party promoters who host popular nights at your favorite club. "If you make friends with one of those promoters, they'll not only put you on the VIP list for all their events, but they'll refer you to other promoters for other events," says Kate Kotler, a regular clubgoer. "One way to make sure that a party or club promoter loves you is by offering to bring pretty, single women with you. It sounds cheesy, but it works like a charm."

The MAN Issue

The Playstation Showdown

Can two ordinary schlubs beat a pair of real Celtics in an NBA Live face-off?

WORDS RICH LEVINE PICTURES KELLY DAVIDSON

SEEING AS I'M ONLY 26, there are few hobbies I've had for more than 20 years. I gave up Legos and Construx at 10, stopped making fun of girls (unless you count Peyton Manning) at 12 and didn't pick up alcohol until about 18. But ever since 1985, when my parents first introduced me to a little black and grey box of eight-bit awesomeness called Nintendo, video games—specifically sports-themed games—have been one of my greatest pastimes.

Aside from the lucrative sponsorship deals (note: This story is brought to you by the good people over at the White Hen Pantry on Cambridge Street), about the only thing I've got in common with professional athletes is a love for video games. Whether killing time before practice or on the road, or simply kicking back on an off-day, these guys are as much the gamers I am. But I've always wondered: Does their superior athletic ability translate into greater prowess in the virtual world?

Posturing and speculation aside, there's just one way to find out for sure: going head-to-head with a couple of pros. So my buddy French (another game addict) and I head over to Celtics practice to take on C's stars Ryan Gomes and Delonte West.

While we wait for West to finish lunch, French and Gomes take center court:

"How you doing, man?" Gomes says.

"I'll be doing a lot better after I beat you," French replies, not missing a beat.

"Oh, OK," Gomes counters. "I see how it is."

In the early going, French—playing as Cleveland—hardly walks the walk, as Gomes rides virtual Paul Pierce and the rest of his Celtics to a 19-4 first-quarter lead. But thanks to a steady dose of LeBron ("It's just like real life," Gomes says. "The guy gets every damn call") and a barrage of Damon Jones three-pointers—accompanied by a second barrage of "Ohhh! Damon Joooones!" screams from French after each one—the Cavs come all the way back to take a one-point lead in the third.

But Jones goes cold, French foolishly ignores LeBron, and Gomes come back to steal a four-point win, 53-49. As a random onlooker at practice notes, "You live by Damon Jones, you die by Damon Jones."

I'm looking forward to my matchup with West, and not just because I'm a huge fan of his real-life game. West is notorious for being a little different from most NBA stars. He has a unique personality that's tough to capture in print. I think the best way to put it—with no offense to a certain other athlete in town—is that Delonte is always just being Delonte.

He wastes no time in bringing that unique personality to the video game arena.

"You sure you can handle this, Delonte?" I ask him. "You just ate a big lunch."

"Won't be a problem," West says, "'cause I'm so fuuuuuunky… yes, I am."

Fair enough. Delonte picks the Celtics (and promptly benches Sebastian Telfair in favor of himself—maybe Doc was watching?), while I go with the Orlando Magic. (In hindsight, this is a horrible decision, given the team's lack of an outside threat. But I'm determined to school West with former college teammate Jameer Nelson, thinking it'll make for a better story. Determined to a fault.)

Before we get started, I have a couple of questions for Delonte: Do the pros play these games as much as I think they do (i.e., as much as I would if I led their lives)? Which guys on the team play the most? Do they always play as themselves?

"That guy [pointing at Gomes] is playing on every road trip. He and Perk [Kendrick Perkins] are always doing that," West says. "But I've never even played this game before."

"It's just like real life. LeBron gets every damn call."
—RYAN GOMES

Left to right: Before the pros met in the finals, Ryan Gomes won a laugher and Delonte West took down the author. But Gomes could only look on as West claimed the title.

I want to think this last statement is a lie, considering we're now less than a minute into our game and he's already figured out all the buttons. But maybe that's just a defense mechanism, because the truth is, I kind of get smoked. Al Jefferson has about 15 offensive rebounds, Pierce is a monster, and virtual Delonte even has a couple big shots. On the other side, my Magic are absolute garbage. I think Darko Milicic is my leading scorer. (Right now you're probably thinking, "Wow, a Darko joke, it really must have been bad...." But no, I'm not joking. Darko's my leading scorer.)

Toward the end of the game, West is sealing a 53-39 victory from the foul line with his computer self:

"Did you know I'm leading the league in foul shooting?"

"Nah, I didn't know that," I reply.

"Well, make sure you put that in your story," he says. Then he adds, "This is gonna be the first time I've beaten anyone in a video game since Sonic the Hedgehog. You know I used to get all them rings!"

In an ideal world, I'd take both Playstations, run them over with my car and pretend that this day never happened, but because I'm a professional—and because my car won't fit in the gym—I take a seat alongside French as West and Gomes square off in the finals of a tournament I was supposed to win.

"Man, I'm not playing this guy," West initially says of Gomes. "He plays too much. No way."

We eventually work out a deal that West is happy with, and the finals get underway with the Celtics taking on the Western Conference All-Stars (I'll let you figure out who's who). And wouldn't you know, the guy who hasn't won a video game since Sonic the Hedgehog beats Gomes, 49-37. But not without some controversy.

Trailing by five points early on, West drives to the hoop with Steve Nash and throws an alley-oop to Tim Duncan.

"Oooooooooh!" West yells. "That's the Big Fundamental. There's a problem here, and we just found it!"

He proceeds to throw alley-oops on roughly 28 of his next 30 possessions on his way to the victory.

"That doesn't even take any skill," Gomes complains. "You're doing it every time."

Above: Nice guy Ryan Gomes, who's known to the team as a video game addict, has game on the court, too. Below: Down goes French! Down goes French!

"This is gonna be the first time I've beaten anyone in a video game since Sonic the Hedgehog."
—DELONTE WEST

"Oh no, this is a skill," West says. "You gotta learn how to do this. Me and my daddy used to work in the coal mines. That's where you learn this."

Honestly, how can you argue with that?

YEAH, FRENCH AND I failed in our debut against the pros, and in the process, I feel like we let down every average guy who's wasted a chunk of his life with a controller in his hand.

I mean, sure, the conditions weren't ideal: I could bitch about how we were playing NBA Live 07 on Playstation 2, when I've spent the last three months playing only NBA 2K7 on Xbox 360; I could lament the fact that both French and I were playing on zero sleep—having taken the red-eye back from Vegas the night before—while West and Gomes hadn't played a game in nearly 72 hours; I could even make a fuss about only having time to play three quarters against West because it was Bob's Southern Bistro Day in the locker room, and he took a little extra time with those Cajun fried shrimp and sweet potato fries.

But no, I won't make those excuses. In fact, forget you read that last paragraph. Instead, I'll focus on the silver lining to this unfortunate outcome.

I think we planted the seed of confidence in the minds of West and Gomes. I think we taught them how to win. In fact, I believe that any forthcoming Celtics run to the playoffs will be a direct result of our afternoon in Waltham.

Well, maybe not. But anything to take my mind off losing that game. IB

The Thrill of Tequila

There are no lows to this spirit's special high.

WORDS AARON NOBEL PICTURES ANTHONY TIFULI

INVITE YOUR BUDDIES for a night of tasting tequila, and brace for the requisite retort. "You mean te-kill-ya? Ha!" Fueled by spring-break memories of regrettable deeds and projectile vomiting, the perception of tequila as the devil's rotgut swill runs rampant among the uninitiated.

So let's shout it from the hilltops: Real men drink real tequila.

The pride of Mexico, good tequila is distilled from 100 percent blue agave, a plant that takes at least eight years to reach maturity in Mexico's Jalisco region and is harvested and distilled according to time-honored tradition and strict regulations.

Superaged in oak whiskey or bourbon barrels, the highest quality tequilas rival the smoothness and complexity of fine single-malt scotches and cognacs.

Flavor savoring aside, tequila's euphoric effect may be its best-kept secret. One of the few stimulant spirits (sake is another), 100 percent agave tequila elicits the best lawful high this side of the Atlantic—a lucid, poised elevation that belies its mistaken reputation as a catalyst of outrageous behavior. But to keep good tequila from spurring a bad night, follow one sacred law: Don't mix. Think of tequila as a jealous girlfriend; don't incur her wrath by philandering with beer, wine or whiskey.

Tequila tasting flights—often featuring several varieties of a given brand or several brands of a given variety—provide a handy crash-course introduction for aspiring connoisseurs. Experience the peppery crisp heat of unaged blanco (silver) tequilas; the mellower reposados, rested in oak barrels for two to 11 months; and the complexity of añejos, aged for a minimum of one year. (A fourth category, gold, is simply blanco tequila with added caramel color and flavor.)

Blended with top-shelf orange liqueurs and fresh fruit, real tequila yields a refined margarita. You can even substitute silver tequila for vodka, gin or rum in an otherwise classic martini or mojito.

Following is a rundown of six local portals to tequila's alternate universe, each with ancillary assets to complement your tequila exploration—from the most erudite tequila intellectual to the hippest tacos.

Cottonwood Café
UPGRADING IT

A copper, cactus-shaped door handle welcomes me to Cottonwood Café, a neon-accented Southwestern oasis in Copley Square. It's around 4:30 pm and veteran beverage manager Robyn Pitchford is slammed. She bustles beneath a towering illuminated wall of tequila bottles in all colors, shapes and sizes. "Margaritas are the bread and butter and the heart of the restaurant," she says. "The owners try to have as many tequilas as there are out there."

Pitchford delves into the next order, but eight-year server Tim Chuck has a minute to talk tequila. "A lot of people come in here and they want a basic margarita, but then they see the extensive list we have, and that's when they get excited," he says. He's taught many a customer how much better a margarita can be if you cough up an extra "buck, buck fifty" for a tequila upgrade. "You're in control. It gives you kind of a euphoric feeling—happy," he says. "A lot of people's perception of tequila—we've all had bad experiences with José growing up."

LESSON #1: Cough up the extra buck-fifty for the upgrade.

The Cactus Club's Horni Margarita takes its name from the Sauza Hornitos tequila that goes into it, not the behavior that the cocktail may inspire.

Cottonwood's daunting tequila list ranges from the Cazadores Blanco at $6 to the Herradura Selección Suprema at $26. Margaritas are its specialty, but flights are available upon request.

I'm ready for a drink. Chuck suggests the Corzo Reposado. It's the only one on the shelf with a bottle that doesn't look straight out of 19th-century Mexico. I learn at my next stop that its chic cologne bottle–esqe rectangular vessel, the work of designer Fabian Baron, is meant to reflect modern Mexico. The offset spout is made to pour like a waterfall, and Chuck fills a small snifter. It tastes like marzipan on my lips and warms my stomach and chest. My eyes soften. I feel an involuntary smile tug at my cheeks as I head to the next stop.

Masa
SMAHT SHOT

Masa's surging culinary reputation has made it a trendy destination of late, but its commitment to tequila shares much of the credit. When you're ready to advance beyond Tequila 101, bartender Greg Neises will be your independent study advisor. Turns out the mastermind behind Masa's tequila list is also a representative for Corzo.

I tell him I just tried Corzo and that it tasted like candy. "It's very heavy in the honey," he says. "The juice they extract from the piña is called aguamiel, which means honey water."

Neises tells me the piña is the heart of the mature agave plant, stripped of the outer leaves, and he proceeds to describe a harvesting and distilling process he's seen firsthand. His encyclopedic tequila knowledge flows as

Atop a gleaming copper bar with leaded seams, Neises charters me a flight: Tezón Blanco; El Tesoro Paradiso, an añejo superaged in cognac barrels; and Chamuco Reposado Especial, a blend of 95 percent reposado with 5 percent añejo. As I sip the Tezón, Neises raves about the company's traditional production methods; they even crush the piña by human-powered stone wheel.

The Chamuco stands out for its label: "It's a girl sleeping with the devils taking her down, kind of a lucid tequila dream," he says. The Paradiso lives up to its name. "Once a tequila is aged four years or more," he says, "it starts to take on characteristics of the barrel, similar to single-malt scotches and cognacs. Extra-aged tequilas take on more characteristics of the wood, superseding that agave flavor."

Neises revels in spreading the tequila habit and tailors his sampling to individual tastes. "Are you a gin drinker, where you'll like an herbaceous tequila, or are you a bourbon drinker, where you like something sweeter up front?" he says. "Are you a Scotch drinker, do you like that earthy mineralistic component to it? Are you a vodka drinker, do you want something ultrarefined?

"If you look at the statistics," Neises says, "Sales of 100 percent agave tequila rose 27 percent last year [in the U.S.] and have nearly quadrupled in the last five years. It's exciting for me to see the number of people who haven't been exposed to good, 100 percent agave tequila and be able to break down those myths and turn them on to tequila. That ability to convert people into true believers is why I'm here."

Neises wraps up my session with a snifter of Don Julio 1942, a butter-smooth añejo with a pronounced vanilla flavor.

I could listen to him talk tequila all night.

Bonfire
THE PERFECT PAIR

Celebrity chef Todd English's cozy crimson steakhouse is on the cutting edge of tacos—we recommend the skirt steak and tuna tartare varieties—with an ample complement of tequilas to wash them down. Bonfire offers an early taco menu from 5 to 6:30 pm every day, allowing patrons to mix-and-match combos of English's wily takes on the Southwestern staple.

We sit at the mile-long bar overlooking the kitchen's wood-fired oven and an army of chefs preparing vertical culinary sculptures. Bartender Heather Regan serves us the Cadillac of tequilas, the Herradura Selección Suprema. She also pours a Suprema-based Ultimate margarita, priced at $35. It's the pinnacle of margaritas, the antithesis of the sour mix–laden, Pixie Stick–sweet headache juice dished out at chain Mexican joints.

In the warmth of the fire, I sense the full onset of the tequila high. It is excellent.

Rudy's Café
HIGH-DIVE

By the time I get to Rudy's, it's my fourth tequila bar of the night. I still don't feel drunk, but I just walked about a mile in the cold with no jacket and it felt like summer. Perhaps I should eat something. I order a combination plate. The food is no match for some nearby taquerías, but it's a large portion.

The bright-enough-to-see-your-food dining room wraps around an 18-seat bar, giving all a view toward the vast tequila selection.

Rudy's is a bit far afield to fit into a one-night tequila tour of Boston, but for a Somerville-centric evening it's your prime tequila option.

I order a shot of Corzo silver and ask the bartender about its waterfall spout. She doesn't know what I'm talking about. The tequila is good, but my appreciation for its integrity has been replaced by a rudimentary fascination with light and sound.

I laugh when, at the second bar in a row, someone cracks up at the sing-songy rhythm of saying "Cabo Wabo Reposado." I say it a few times, keep laughing and end up staying until it's too late to go anywhere else.

Olé Mexican Grill
ODE TO AGAVE

Starting out fresh the next night, my first destination is a festive Cambridge hot spot with a deserved reputation for muy bueno authentic cuisine. And, of course, tequila.

We order a blanco flight and an añejo flight, each featuring the brands Sauza Tres Generaciones, Herradura and El Tesoro de Don Felipe, set in a handmade wooden tray with a palate-cleansing shot of sangrita—a nonalcoholic, tomato-based chaser that's a dead ringer for shrimp cocktail sauce.

For some in-flight entertainment, we order the guacamole, prepared tableside in the traditional manner, hand-ground in a stone bowl. The guac is the perfect precursor to your chiles rellenos or pork ribs or anything on the everything-is-good menu.

We supplement the flights with Olé's dangerously smooth Tequini, featuring Hacienda del Cristero tequila by Herradura, fresh lime juice, Patrón Citrónge and Grand Marnier served straight up. Also packing a wallop is the Olé margarita, another no-sour-mix concoction of Herradura Reposado, Patrón Citrónge and fresh lime juice.

In the back of the room, bar manager Renny Waldron is another ambassador of tequila, luring newcomers into the world of the blue agave.

"Ninety-nine percent of people's bad experiences were with gold tequilas," he says. But they're hooked "as soon as they taste the 100 percent agave."

Be sure to save room for the panecillo de chocolate, a bread pudding with a blend of Mexican and Belgian bittersweet chocolate, fresh berries and vanilla bean ice cream. It goes well with the Reserva del Señor Almendrado, an almond-infused dessert tequila.

Cactus Club: YOUTHFUL SPIRITS

So you and the guys have enjoyed a somewhat-civilized night of tequila appreciation, but the night is still young and you're on the prowl. Head for the Cactus Club, where the bumping bar area is a playground for slurping margaritas—an estimated 100,000-plus margs served in 2005—and drooling over a sea of young singles and distractingly attractive employees. If the stuffed bison above the bar could talk, he'd suggest "más tequila." The best-selling Horni margarita (named for Sauza Hornitos) is a fitting choice at the popular hookup spot, but it's only one of many popular recipes that feature the Club's signature homemade sour mix.

Fresh off a Sauza-sponsored training mission in Jalisco, Cactus Club general manager Mike Chiffault is another true believer committed to spreading the tequila gospel. "The thing that struck me the most," he says, "is agave plants take a minimum of eight years to mature, whereas whiskey or vodka can be harvested a couple times a year. There's a stigma of tequila being not a high-class type of liquor, but in reality a lot of work goes into it. Culturally, people are understanding that it's not just a low-class alcohol that gives you headaches."

Flights are available by request. For the afterwork crowd, appetizers are half-price at the bar, 4–7 pm, Monday–Thursday.

MIXED MESSAGES

Though aficionados prefer to savor it neat, fine tequila can be an excellent platform for mixed drinks when not adulterated with inferior complementary ingredients. To be a margarita mixmaster, banish from your mind the gold-tequila-plus-triple-sec-plus-powdered-sour-mix cliché. In fact, banish those ingredients from your life—and with them the headaches and hangovers their offspring creates. Stock your home bar with 100 percent agave tequila; fine liqueurs such as Grand Marnier, Cointreau and Agavero; fresh fruit juices; and an abundance of fresh limes. Margarita recipes abound, but we borrowed the following favorites from two local watering holes that specialize in mixed perfection. —AN

Baja Maz

Cactus Club manager Dave McInnes shared the restaurant's recipe for its Baja Marg. Served on the rocks, the slightly dry concoction is a best-seller at the club.

- 1¾ oz Sauza Conmemorativo
- ½ oz Cointreau
- 4 oz fresh-squeezed OJ
- 1 oz fresh lime juice

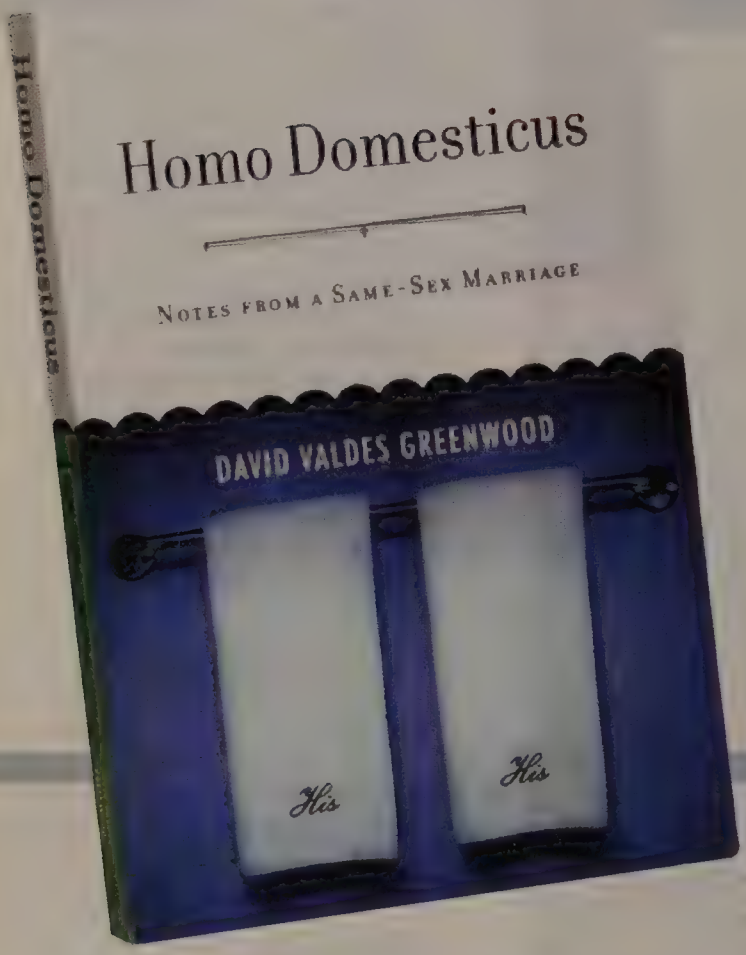
The Honeydrop

Greg Neises, Masa bartender and "tequila ambassador" for tequila brands Corzo and Cazadores, shared two examples of his agave alchemy.

- 2 oz Cazadores Reposado
- ½ oz Licor 43
- 1 oz sweetened lemon juice (2 parts fresh-squeezed lemon, 1 part sugar, 2 parts spring water)

Swirl the interior of a martini glass with a spiral of honey. Pour ingredients into an iced mixing cup, shake and strain straight-up into the glass. "The honey really pulls out the flavor of the reposado tequila, producing a creamier, fuller body," Neises says.

Raspberry GingerTequini



- 1¾ oz Corzo Silver
- ½ oz Agavero tequila liqueur
- 1¼ oz white grape juice

In a mixing cup, muddle three raspberries and two slices of ginger. Add ice and ingredients, shake and strain straight-up into a martini glass. Garnish with three fresh floating raspberries.

MEN IN THEIR WEDDED BLISS

Homo Domesticus: Notes From a Same-Sex Marriage* is by David Valdes Greenwood, who teaches writing at Tufts and lives with his husband and daughter in Arlington.

It'd be hard to read this book about married men—married to each other that is—and not see them as highly sympathetic guys. (Mitt, hello?) David, the writer of the household, married to teacher Jason, strolls gracefully through the 10 years of their romance and, more recently, marriage. Though initially their relationship is met with some disapproval from David's family, and the blank shock of some administrators at a school still learning to sound out the phrase "my husband" when said by a man, David reports it all with philosophical grace, unbitterly. From the inside, their relationship, like any, consists of attracting and sometimes chafing opposites in the realms of romance, pragmatism, body style and tastes that are sometimes irritating, sometimes accommodating. When Jason "miffs" (their word for hurting or annoying each other) David over a play he has written, he apologizes: "Late for the play. Late with the flowers. Early with the criticism. Sorry." Monogamous by choice, they negotiate crushes and attractions, and at one point go through a marital Ice Age, which is melted by therapy, patience and some positive shifts between them. The sweet culmination is their adoption of baby Lily, whose arrival ushers in the best family values.

The Arlington Center (369 Mass. Ave., Arlington; 781-316-0282; www.arlingtoncenter.org) offers classes in yo Feldenkrais and many other mind-body areas. You can sign up or drop in.

The Arlington Center, with its many offerings in the vast spheres of wellness, exudes an embracin atmosphere in this homey town, where you can easily park your car before going inside to warm up you body and soul. Large studio rooms let you stretch out as you experience, for instance, the Feldenkra Method, with its attention to subtly altering habitual body patterns that help you learn to stand and lie a bit differently on our eternal underpinning, the floor and earth. The center invites you to roam through various yoga possibilities—Ashtanga, Iyengar, Vinyasa and yoga for the back. There's even yoga for parents and teachers of children with various physical, developmental, learning and behavioral disorders, to help create new neural pathways in the brain and greater body awareness. And Dance Infusion has participants moving and grooving around improvisationally, mirroring each other, inventing movements, bringing to the often–overly constrained adult body that spontaneity and limberness that kids enjoy naturally. Ahh… liberation! That spirit bubbles over to courses like a Couples Laughter Playshop for people who want to reroute conflict and stress through the easy-going wisdom located in the funny bone, or find the starry buzz of concentration in mindfulness and meditation.

THESE BOOTS ARE MADE FOR FUN AND STURDINESS

Union Boot in Union Square (253 Washington St., Somerville; 617-666-1501) sells discounted shoes, clogs and boots for women and men.

Walking shoes, clogs by Dansko and others and boots overflowing from Vintage Etc. in Cambridge end up here, discounted. The namesake Union boots, icons of the store, have actually been produced continuously since 1867; the Army wore them during Reconstruction. Today they emanate a kind of intellectual friskiness, though they're also really solid Amish women wear them. And, along with being ecological, green in politics and sometimes in color, many have substantial latex soles that show the earth they crunch along just who's boss. Lots of the footwear here has a wry ironic tone; the red-strapped satin Mary Jane or Dorothy/Oz ones would make a statement at a wedding or art opening. There are elf-like boots with two leaf-colored parts, as well as the very interesting shoes and boots designed by an architect that employ oblique angles and toe shapes, as if they were chic and funny staircases for your feet and legs. Sheep proffer their two sides, outer sheepskin brimming with internal furriness, to boot(s). Famously worthy ortho-sturdy Birkenstocks reveal humor in their Papillio clogs, decorated all over with abstract yarn scribbles. Lively owner Elizabeth pow-wows with a self-declared "Finn Comfort aficionado," like a scholar of footwear.

REVIEW

PETIT ROBERT, PART DEUX

Moderately priced French classics work just as well in the South End as in Kenmore Square. (Quelle surprise.)

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

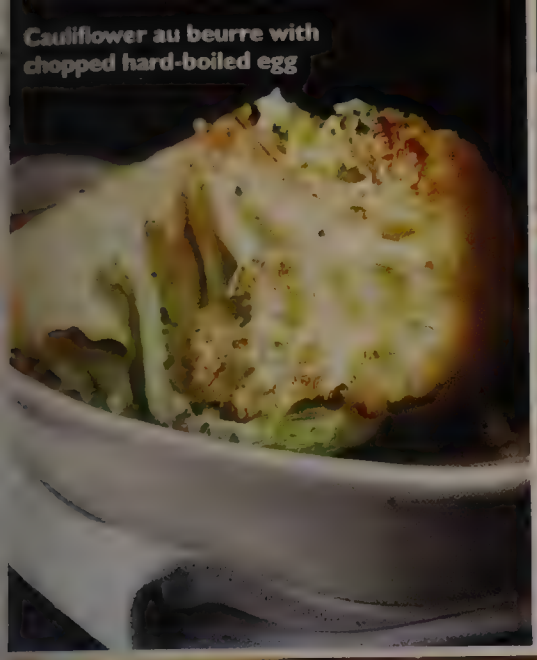
Jacky Robert and Loic Le Garrec have obviously devised a winning formula in the competitive Boston restaurant scene. Their Petit Robert Bistro in Kenmore Square debuted a year and a half ago to consistent enthusiastic reviews for its authentic, unpretentious, well-executed French cuisine and its upbeat, engaging ambiance that's at once sophisticated and down-to-earth. And its patron-friendly prices place it in the top ranks of Boston eateries in that all-important, practical criterion the French apply to restaurants—rapport prix-qualité, prices proportionate to quality.

Invoking this formula in the restaurant-rich South End a few months ago, Robert and Le Garrec opened a second location, in the space formerly occupied by Rouge on Columbus Avenue. Almost since the day it opened its doors, the second Petit Robert Bistro has been playing to packed houses. Its no-reservations policy puts a premium on early arrival, which I've always thought meant sometime before 7 pm. We beat that time by almost 45 minutes one recent mid-week evening—and lucky we did, since the place filled up rapidly; by 6:45, every seat was taken.

The menu at the Columbus Avenue location, identical to that of its Kenmore Square sibling (current menus can be found on the restaurant's Web site), is large but not unwieldy, offering 10 first courses, half a dozen soups and salads, 16 main courses, four side dishes and 14 desserts. Over one lunch and two dinners, I sampled a reasonable array of these offerings and almost without exception found them first-rate. Among the first courses, the trio of homemade pâtés ($7) brought generous portions of three distinctive terrines: a coarse-textured, robustly spiced country pâté with a medley of meats; a medium-textured pork rillette with less assertive flavor; and a refined, silky-textured chicken-liver mousse pâté that combined sweet and savory. These came with tiny cornichons (small pickles) and Dijon mustard, with a leaf of frisée thrown in for good measure.

Another bistro favorite—one seldom encountered in these parts—was the "old-fashioned fish quenelle" ($9.75), a dish traditionally made with pike, a very bony fish whose highest and best use is in quenelles.

Duck confit



This exquisite custard of ground fish bound with eggs arrived in a white crock filled with bubbling-hot lobster sauce of incomparable flavor and nuance. The large quenelle, light as a feather with an almost ethereal texture, proved remarkably filling, and together with the superb sauce and the buttery puff pastry crescent with which it shared the crock, it made a major dent in my appetite. Moules marinières ($8.75) consisted of almost two dozen plump, sweet, impeccably clean mussels in a delicious shallot-and-wine broth that I couldn't resist eating with a spoon once the mussels were gone. On another visit we confined ourselves to main courses with a shared side dish of cauliflower au beurre ($4.75) as an appetizer. We were rewarded with a generous portion of fresh, buttery cauliflower, gratinéed under the broiler and accompanied by chopped hard-boiled egg, a splendid appetizer. Main courses run the gamut from tripe Provençale to steak-frites. Cassoulet ($14.75) commanded my immediate attention, since it's a dish I almost always order when available. I spent a week in my younger days sampling cassoulets in half a dozen Paris bistros, comparing them with regard to various components and qualities for which I constructed a matrix spreadsheet: flavor and texture of the beans; types and quality of the meat (usually pork sausage, duck and/or lamb); and flavor and spiciness of the sauce. In all of those departments, Petit Robert's cassoulet came through with flying colors, with exquisitely al dente white beans; an enticing sauce redolent of tomatoes, carrots and garlic; and chunks of succulent, tender lamb and moist garlic sausage. On a different evening, I ordered the duck confit and pork sausage ($16.75), another good dish for a cold winter night. This brought a huge hindquarter of duck, with crisp skin and tender, fall-off-the-bone, flavorful flesh, and an accompaniment of tangy-sweet braised cabbage, roasted potato chunks and a refreshing slaw of julienned vegetables. Unfortunately, the sausage, dry and mealy, proved an unworthy companion to the duck.

Seared scallops ($17.25) brought three large scallops, sliced in half horizontally and seared to a perfectly tender, moist texture—their slightly caramelized exterior and sweet, moist interior enhanced by a garnish of creamy rice, carrots, broccoli, mango strips, and onions. Grilled skirt steak and frites ($19.75) paired a flavorful, coarse-textured cut of beef, thin but reasonably juicy, with slender French fries that had unfortunately cooled by the time they reached our table. A small sauceboat of spectacular lemony béarnaise sauce (the other sauce options were poivre and bordelaise) provided more-than-sufficient compensation for the cold fries. Finally, roast chicken ($14.75), a dish that's often used as a benchmark for evaluating a chef's core skills, earned high honors, with well-herbed, crisp skin, succulent, tender flesh, and a marvelous flavor. A small sauceboat of jus, delightfully herbed and pleasantly salty, enhanced both the chicken and its mashed potato accompaniment. Fresh broccoli florets and the same julienned vegetable slaw that accompanied the duck confit completed the satisfying ensemble. .

The bistro's lengthy dessert menu included all the usual suspects—chocolate mousse, soufflé, fruit tarts, crème brûlée, chocolate cake, poached pear and crêpe suzette—which made choosing no easy matter. The tarte tatin ($7.50), a specialty of Maison Robert (founded by Jacky Robert's uncle Lucien more than two decades ago, and where Jacky honed his skills as chef de cuisine in the late '90s) inspired nostalgia for that hostelry of fond memory, with its warm, spicy-sweet apples, buttery pastry and voluptuous crème fraîche. Most memorable of the bistro's desserts was the giant profiterole ($6): A sphere of tender pastry the size of a softball filled with vanilla ice cream and inundated with dark, intensely rich and fudgy chocolate sauce that formed a pool almost half an inch high on the bottom of the plate, it destroyed any semblance of restraint that I had exhibited in limiting my intake of the bistro's incomparable minibaguettes (prebaked in Montreal and finished in the bistro's kitchen) earlier in the meal.

The bistro's wine list offered affordable selections, several by the glass. These included the Lockwood cabernet sauvignon ($7.50), a round, full-bodied red, with forward fruit accompanied by decent acidity; Latour pinot noir ($7), with a delightful bouquet and taste of Burgundian terroir; Château d'Oupia Minervois ($7.50), a robust red from the sun-drenched Midi; and Domaine de Trapadis ($7.50), a young Côte du Rhône, grapey and peppery, a blend dominated by granache. Visually, the restaurant's principal dining room is simply and attractively appointed, with large, oak-framed mirrors above banquettes across from a wall of exposed bricks illuminated from above. Sheer gold café curtains dress the storefront windows, and tables are set with crisp white napery.

A friendly, professional staff provided attentive and efficient service. Perhaps too efficient, as if inspired by the origins of the word bistro. The term is attributed to foreign soldiers who occupied Paris in the aftermath of the Franco-Prussian war and reportedly demanded the café waiters to bring their food "bistro," or quickly. Still, Petit Robert's waitstaff was unfailingly gracious. Only the promptness with which the courses arrived, and my knowledge that there were hungry diners at the door waiting to come in, hurried me along.

I so loved this restaurant that I found little to criticize, but I cannot resist the opportunity to strike a blow for linguistic precision. A French restaurant that seems so authentic in a number of ways should reconsider labeling its courses in the fractured French used by too many American restaurants. Main courses are not entrées. Entrées are served at the beginning, upon entering the meal. In fact, they are the courses that Petit Robert Bistro's menu calls its hors d'oeuvres. And while hors d'oeuvres is a familiar French phrase that has been taken over into English to include appetizers, I always think of them in their literal French sense, as the little things—apart from or outside of the principal work of the meal—that one eats while sipping a kir and waiting for the first courses to arrive. iB

His Casa Is Your Casa

Why Pedro never leaves the building...

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Pedro Alarcon is living proof that you can go home again. Almost 10 years after opening La Casa de Pedro in a Watertown Square storefront, Alarcon has moved his popular Latin restaurant to much bigger digs about a mile down the road. The new Casa de Pedro, at 343 Arsenal St., boasts more than 160 seats, a full bar and a seven-days-a-week lunch-and-dinner schedule. It's a grandly beautiful space, where the walls are painted a rich yellow and hung with tropical-themed paintings, and an uplit giant palm tree casts shadows on the high ceiling. It's also a space where a number of restaurants have languished and died: Naked Fish, Red Sauce and, most recently, Marzo 29, which lasted less than six months.

After 10 years, Pedro Alarcon's restaurant is on the move—but it's not going very far

What makes Alarcon so confident of success? Yes, he's established a following, and his work ethic is impeccable—he's always in the house. But the bottom line is his food—an amalgam of Latin cuisines, mostly Venezuelan, Colombian and Ecuadorian—which is delicious, served in ample portions and extremely well priced. The most expensive entrée, a charcoal-grilled all-natural 12-ounce sirloin steak, is $25 and plated with black beans, rice, fluffy fried yucca and sweet plantains. A long list of tapas includes a piquant ceviche, crunchy with fresh vegetables and Peruvian dried corn, and smoky grilled Venezuelan cheese, as well as arepas and empanadas.

But wait, there's more: Any day now, Alarcon will be adding valet parking at lunch and dinner; serving weekend brunch (buffet and à la carte); and offering grilled pizzas topped with the likes of black bean purée, sausage and shrimp.

Meanwhile, he's readying the old storefront space for a new eatery featuring what he calls "affordable and tasty Italian-Mexican fast food." He's considering three possible names: Pedro Around the World; Italmex; and El Professor, because, he explains, "In Venezuela, when you want to show respect, you call someone El Professor."

St. Single and the Wine Shrine

Valentine's Day is, of course, named for St. Valentine, but if you're not in a relationship, the oncoming barrage of red roses, heart-shaped chocolates and ads for sparkly jewelry may motivate you to focus on another saint who better suits your singularity. Catholicism offers a fabulous range of specialists to intercede on your unattached behalf. Feeling depressed? Raise your spirits with Saint Christina the Astonishing, who reportedly could levitate to avoid contact with the sinful. Afraid of getting hurt? St. Amalburga protects against bruising.

On second thought, it may be time to appoint a new saint as upfront as her (his?) name. St. Single, the creation of UpStairs on the Square wine director Matt Reiser, is the focus of a new holiday to be celebrated for the very first time on February 13. For $13 (or $14,000 for couples—ha!), you can celebrate your singletude with a cocktail and tasty nibbles, from 9:30 pm to 1 am. Even better: The celebrant who comes equipped with the best and most original rendering of St. Single wins a special prize!

Three-Petit?

Jacky Robert, the clever French chef who now owns and runs two Petit Robert Bistros—the original in Kenmore Square and the second in the South End—is setting his sights on yet another location for his casual, reasonably priced concept. Rumor has it he's focusing outside Boston, with the likeliest choice for a venue in Cambridge, not far from Harvard Square. Not so "petit" anymore. IB

WINE

Australian Shiraz for a Song

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

Shiraz is not what you think. Not always, at least. Although most bottles of shiraz on the market taste like hipper substitutes for merlot, there are some real knockouts lurking among them. And the great thing is that they're not all cut from the same mold. One of the wonders of shiraz is its versatility. More so than cabernet—although perhaps less strikingly than pinot noir—shiraz is "feel good" wine that also reflects its origins.

From a value standpoint, this is a particularly opportune time to seek out and score some better shiraz. Australia, the success story of the international wine business over the past decade, has hit a wall. Sales growth has been so dramatic that it spurred massive vineyard planting, with the inevitable result that supply has shot seriously ahead of demand. After years of 20- to 40-percent increases, 2006 saw virtually zero change in Australian wine exports to the U.S. The classic benefit of overproduction is that prices moderate. Estimates predict we'll be in this sweet spot with shiraz, and Australian wine in general, for at least the next few years. With this in mind, I set out to find some great shiraz bargains for you—wines that taste more expensive than they are.

Jim-Jim Shiraz, McLaren Vale, 2005 ($10). McLaren Vale is one of the elite growing districts in Australia, suitably cool enough in climate to produce balanced, well-structured wines that often sell for a premium. The shocker here is that somehow Jim-Jim is making this easygoing crowd-pleaser there and selling it for just 10 bucks. The flavors are on the earthy side, with baked red berry fruit and a touch of sweet spices leading into a peppery finish. Soft enough to quaff yet substantial enough in flavor to work with hearty stews.

Hope Estate Shiraz, Hunter Valley, 2005 ($10). Hunter is also prime real estate. Notice how many of these wines are selling for the same price as the mass-produced big brands that have miscellaneous appellations of origin (for instance, Southeast Australia), meaning that the majority of the grapes composing them originate in reclaimed deserts. We've followed Hope for a few vintages now, and this one's the best. Redolent of smoke, black pepper and clove, the slightly jammy, mouth-warming flavors incline toward vanilla and black cherry. This wine packs quite a punch but is smooth at the same time. Outstanding with herb-rubbed grilled chicken.

Yalumba Shiraz, Barossa Valley, 2004 ($13). This wine has an earthy, leathery stylishness, with the flavors tending toward raspberry and green pepper. Big and intensely fruity, with the tannins a bit more substantial than most of the other selections, it finishes with an interesting note of mocha. This is a moderately priced wine that'll complement your juiciest, thickest cut of rare steak without any problem.

Marquis Philips Shiraz, Southeast Australia, 2005 ($16). This nobly titled wine from the low-rent Southeast Australia geographic designation was the most popular at the tasting, and although it was my second choice, it's certainly the most polished moderately priced shiraz I've tasted in a long time. The aromas are an intriguing blend of vanilla, sun-dried cherries and root vegetables. Silky and lush on the palate, with smooth, rich, ultraripe, chocolatey flavors, it's almost like a jacket you can either dress up or dress down. I wouldn't hesitate to serve it to someone who's never tried good shiraz before and wants to know what all the fuss is about, while also presenting it to the most critical gourmet. Food accompaniments? Here again, as casual as a cheeseburger or as formal as a rack of lamb.

Pure Love "Barossa Jack" Shiraz, Barossa Valley, 2005 ($14). This wine is an absolute stunner. A new release, Barossa Jack also goes by the name Layer Cake shiraz, an apt moniker since it's as rich as a chocolate dessert. Very fleshy, with luscious fruit, floral blackberry scents and a viscous, warm mouthfeel, this is the wine to drink on a cold night. As pure an expression of shiraz flavor as you're likely to find at anything near this price, it's the ultimate upgrade possibility. If you know someone who enjoys shiraz but is stuck in a rut with a particular brand, or won't pay more than $10, have a bottle of this with them and just watch the reaction.

Music: A Mashing Good Time

Used to be that mash-up masters maintained a low profile in bootleg recording studios and the dingy backrooms of Somerville music clubs. (Laying down new vocals atop someone else's recorded music tracks was a dicey proposition, legally.) But nowadays, even the establishment is getting into the act. On Feb. 2, as august an institution as the Institute of Contemporary Art is hosting a program titled Classical Mashup. The fusion fun starts at 8 pm with New England Conservatory's Bruce Brubaker and composer/DJ Nico Muhly's "Haydnseek," a blend of piano sonatas by Franz Joseph Haydn with live sampling and an interactive computer performance. Next, Donal Fox takes the stage with "Mashups in Blue," which features a fusing of music from several late, great musicians spanning the 18th through the 21st centuries—including Haydn, J.S Bach, Thelonious Monk and James Brown. It's a great chance to sample some new (well, new-ish) music, and to check out the ICA's theater, with floor-to-ceiling windows that offer matchless views of the harbor. 100 Northern Ave., Boston (617-478-3100). www.icaboston.org. 8 pm. $20, members; $25, nonmembers. —RL

Jason Moran

Music: Mind Over Matter

The whitewashed stylings of Kenny G aside, contemporary jazz falls into two basic camps: There's the loose, kicked-back retro groove of New Orleans swing, and there's the meticulously cerebral mind trip à la Miles Davis. The sound of pianist Jason Moran—who performs at Cambridge's Regattabar on Feb. 1—lands squarely in the latter. Once named Jazz Artist of the Year by Playboy magazine, the 32-year-old Texan takes his brand of hip-hop– and classical-spiked jazz seriously as a fine art, in a very literal sense. Egon Schiele's painting "Facing Left" inspired the title of his second album; Robert Rauschenberg's chaotic style was the motivation behind many of the songs on his third album, Black Stars; and most recently, Moran was commissioned to create music for three different art institutions: the Walker Art Center in Minneapolis, the Dia Art Foundation and Jazz at Lincoln Center. The music from these commissions formed the springboard for Moran's latest album, Artist in Residence. But there's no need for all this cool sophistication to scare you away. Just sit back, close your eyes and let Moran take you on a mind-blowing journey. Charles Hotel, 1 Bennett St., Cambridge (617-661-5000). www.regattabarjazz.com. 7:30 and 10 pm. $20 in advance; $24 day of show. —RL

"Glorifried" chicken with waffles

CityScope: Southern Comfort

If one of those organic-macrobiotic-vegan restaurants ever celebrates 50 years of service, we'll probably show up at the party out of sheer disbelief. But when it comes to paying tribute to Bob's Southern Bistro's five decades of serving crispy "glorifried" chicken and light-and-fluffy butter- and syrup-slathered waffles, the pleasure's all ours. Back in 1957, Robert "Bob" Morgan and his wife, Dottie, opened up a soul-food lunch counter called Bob's in the not-yet-chic-and-trendy South End; in 1968, Morgan moved it from Mass. Ave. to its current digs on Columbus, changed the name to Bob the Chef's and expanded the menu. Daryl Settles bought the place in 1990, adding some upscale food items and introducing live jazz to the mix; and the final transformation came in 2005, when he rechristened the spot Bob's Southern Bistro. On Jan. 28, to celebrate its 50th anniversary (and 500th Jazz Brunch), Bob's will feature menu favorites from throughout its storied history—from chicken 'n' waffles and BBQ ribs to blue-crab eggs benedict and doughnut bread pudding. Take in the sweet vocals of Lori Dow and a complimentary mimosa, and let the Southern spirit soothe your soul. 604 Columbus Ave., Boston (617-536-6204). www.bobssouthernbistro.com. 10 am-2:30 pm. $25. —LPK

TUE.–SUN./FEB. 6–18

Performing Arts: No Doubt About It

When we heard that a Tony-winning actress, a Tony-winning director and an Academy Award–winning writer were teaming up for a show in Boston, you could've told us they were doing a remake of Gigli and we'd have been excited. But when Cherry Jones, Doug Hughes and John Patrick Shanley's show opens at the Colonial Theater on Feb. 6, it won't be the 2003 Bennifer classic; rather, the trio is presenting Doubt, a 2005 Tony- and Pulitzer-winning drama. The story, which is set during the '60s at a Catholic school in Brooklyn, chronicles the struggles of Sister Aloysius, an old-fashioned, conservative nun played by Jones (and for which she won the 2005 Tony for Best Actress), over whether to report a colleague she suspects of having committed sexual abuse. We don't want to give away too much, but this production is a must-see. You'll just have to take it on faith. Colonial Theater, 106 Boylston St., Boston (617-426-9366). www.broadwayacrossamerica.com. Tue.-Thu., 7:30 pm; Fri., 8 pm; Sat., 2 and 8 pm; Sun., 1 and 5 pm. $37.50-$87.50. —RL

SUN.–SAT./JAN.28–APRIL 22

Museums and Galleries: Livin' Large

Bradford Washburn lived the life most weekend warriors only dream of. An accomplished mountaineer and aerial photographer, the founder (and former director) of Boston's Museum of Science traveled all over the world for research, and he documented his adventures in stunning pictures. Beginning Jan. 28, the Museum of Science presents a collection of shots Washburn took at the most extreme vistas on earth. The exhibition is titled Colossal, and the large-format prints don't disappoint. The 3- by 4-foot images are large enough to capture lucidly the world's tallest peaks, most remote locales and most breathtaking expanses of arctic landscape. Science Park, Boston (617-723-2500). www.mos.org. Free with museum admission: $16; $14, seniors; $13, ages 3-11. —LPK

All About Altman

The Brattle's Robert Altman tribute does it right for the late, great director.

BY SEAN BURNS

There once was a time when movie stars were allowed to stand smack dab at the center of the screen, reciting their carefully scripted lines of dialogue before a stationary camera without fear of interruption. But that was before Robert Altman showed up and made things interesting.

This is, I understand, a grotesquely hyperbolic and foolishly reductive statement, but also one that felt strangely apt in the immediate wake of Altman's passing in November. He was eulogized at the time as merely the father of the multicharacter ensemble drama, but in actuality Robert Altman did more to permanently alter the language of cinematic storytelling than any filmmaker since Jean Luc-Godard first started playing with jump-cuts. Altman's densely packed frames, restless, roving camera and unmistakable overlapping soundscapes have become part and parcel of our contemporary movie grammar.

The good folks at the Brattle pay tribute this month with a wonderful eight-film series that showcases Altman's relentless audiovisual innovations, his playful dismantling of genre tropes and that cheerfully dyspeptic strand of off-kilter humanism in all their giant widescreen glory. "Robert Altman's '70s" sticks to the American maverick's early career, correctly assigning a possessive credit to the decade that he, more than any other filmmaker, claimed as his own—yielding an astonishingly prolific run of diverse, unorthodox pictures that has yet to be matched.

Thirty-seven years later, waist-deep in another messy, unpopular war, the electrifying, anarchic energy of *M*A*S*H* (Jan. 26) feels contemporary again. Sure, Donald Sutherland and Elliott Gould set the template for slob comedy sidekicks, and this is one of the funniest, most irreverent movies ever made, yet the spectre of death still hangs over it like an ominous cloud. Take another look at those gory operating scenes and it becomes all too clear that Hawkeye and Trapper John's prankish misbehavior stems not from childishness, but from a place of genuine moral outrage. This is the angriest film I've ever wet my pants laughing at.

It's common knowledge that Gould was never better than when he was working with Altman. Long circulated on bad VHS bootlegs, the only recently rediscovered California Split (Jan. 28) sends the actor talking be-bop circles around George Segal's harried everyman. Both of them play alcoholic gambling junkies indulging themselves on a seemingly neverending lost weekend full of high stakes and hookers, desperately chasing that pot of gold at the end of the rainbow, and discovering all too late that it's empty.

But Altman and Gould's collaborative masterpiece remains The Long Goodbye (Jan. 28), a radical reworking of Raymond Chandler's dime-store potboiler injected with a healthy dose of Nixon-era cynicism. Upending every film noir tradition in the book, Gould plays the iconic Phillip Marlowe as a mumbling man out of time, revealing that such fictional knights in shining armor sadly have no place in our compromised modern age. Bitterly hilarious, the film boasts groundbreaking sunburnt cinematography by Vilmos Zsigmond and a tongue-in-cheek score by John Williams that reasserts the same few notes everywhere from supermarket Musak to a doorbell.

Altman's more self-conscious side can be glimpsed in Images (Jan. 31), a possible prototype for David Lynch's Inland Empire that follows Susannah York's tormented housewife through a series of repeated visual motifs and shifting identities. He mines similar turf with more success in 3 Women (Jan. 29), which boasts the most captivatingly strange Shelley Duvall performance the director ever elicited.

Still unavailable on DVD, the director's seldom-screened Brewster McCloud (Jan. 30) stars Bud Cort as a young man who wishes he were a bird and lives inside the Houston Astrodome. That's all I need, folks. See you there.

There are few passages in movies more haunting than Warren Beatty's dim-bulb brothel owner stumbling his way through McCabe & Mrs. Miller (Jan. 27). Altman tears down gung-ho American pioneer mythology and replaces it with something far more tawdry and futile, synced brilliantly with the plaintive Leonard Cohen songs gracing the soundtrack. Zsigmond's cinematography remains a benchmark of beautiful squalor, and somehow this alien, almost inexplicable mood-piece manages to be at once embittered and heartfelt.

Finally, the series closes with Nashville (Feb. 1), the movie most often cited as Altman's magnum opus, and one that within its bustling margins and 40-odd characters feels like it just might contain the entirety of human experience. A revolutionary tapestry dissecting a moment when the politics of celebrity eclipsed plain old politics, Nashville seems even more prescient and insightful today than at the time of its release. It's a fitting capper for the Brattle's welcome salute to this peerless American maverick. There won't be another one like him. iB

Robert Altman's '70s

Alpha Dog ★★

In this slicked-up, phony Hollywood gloss on a te true story, writer-director Nick Cassavetes preten condemn the kind of hip-hop video/Tony Mon posturing that sent a bunch of nitwit teenage pushers stumbling bass-ackwards into felony mu raps. Emile Hirsch stars as a twerpy suburban kingpin who stupidly kidnaps the baby br (Anton Yelchin) of a meth-head rival. Played by Foster, in what seems to be a vaudevillian's impre of Sean Penn's The Falcon and the Snowman pe mance, this superpowered speed freak can take ou tire keg parties using Tae Kwon Do, while his yo hostage sibling is treated to poolside threesomes high school hotties. Assorted, similarly juvenile tasies run amok, while Cassavetes dishonestly tsk and wags his fingers at everything he doesn't see understand that his movie is glorifying. Bruce W shows up wearing one of his more ridiculous wigs, Sharon Stone overemotes in a fat suit. Believe i not, Alpha Dog is made bearable thanks only to a cate, incredibly empathetic supporting turn fi Justin Timberlake. Seriously. (At Boston Comm Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Blood Diamond ★★

Director Edward Zwick, who started out as a cocre of the TV show Thirtysomething before moving i bloated, preachy spectacles such as Courage Under and The Last Samurai, makes action movies for gu liberals. Trying to swaddle his relentless message-m gering in slick Hollywood clichés, Zwick often co up with the worst of both worlds: big budget adv tures that grind to a halt every 10 minutes to lect you. Blood Diamond should've been a corker, as Sierra Leone diamond massacres of the late 1990s rich with cinematic possibilities, and Leonardo Caprio delivers a surprisingly convincing, charisma performance as a scummy smuggler taking advant of a noble mine slave (Djimon Hounsou, who's pla so many slaves in movies since starring in Amistad, could probably perform Roots as a one-man show now) to chase a pink diamond the size of a golf b Alas, Zwick squanders this promising setup wit devastating lack of forward momentum. Every sce runs at least twice as long as it needs to, and Zwic pompous, self-consciously prestigious tone negates story's gritty urgency. (At Boston Common, Fenw Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Children of Men ★★★★

My pick for the best picture of 2006, Alfonso Cu rón's Children of Men is the kind of movie you o thought they didn't make anymore. A ruthless, grily politicized piece of speculative science ficti that conveniently doubles as an edge-of-your-s chase thriller, the film uses a dark vision of the fut to critique the way we're living right now. As in t best sci-fi, the film feels more topically and emotic ally keyed into our current, uneasy cultural mome than any present-tense tale possibly could. In a frig eningly believable future London after a worldwi infertility crisis has sent civilization into a viole tailspin, Clive Owen gives a magnificent old-sch Humphrey Bogart performance, shepherding huma ity's last hope through a bombed-out battlegrou and rediscovering depths of compassion and valor forgot he even had. Cuarón and his brilliant cin matographer, Emmanuel Lubezki, have rewritten t rules of the action film, shooting exclusively wi available light and in a succession of long, mirac lously unbroken camera movements, thus lendin nerve-wracking real-time anxiety to the proceedin (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

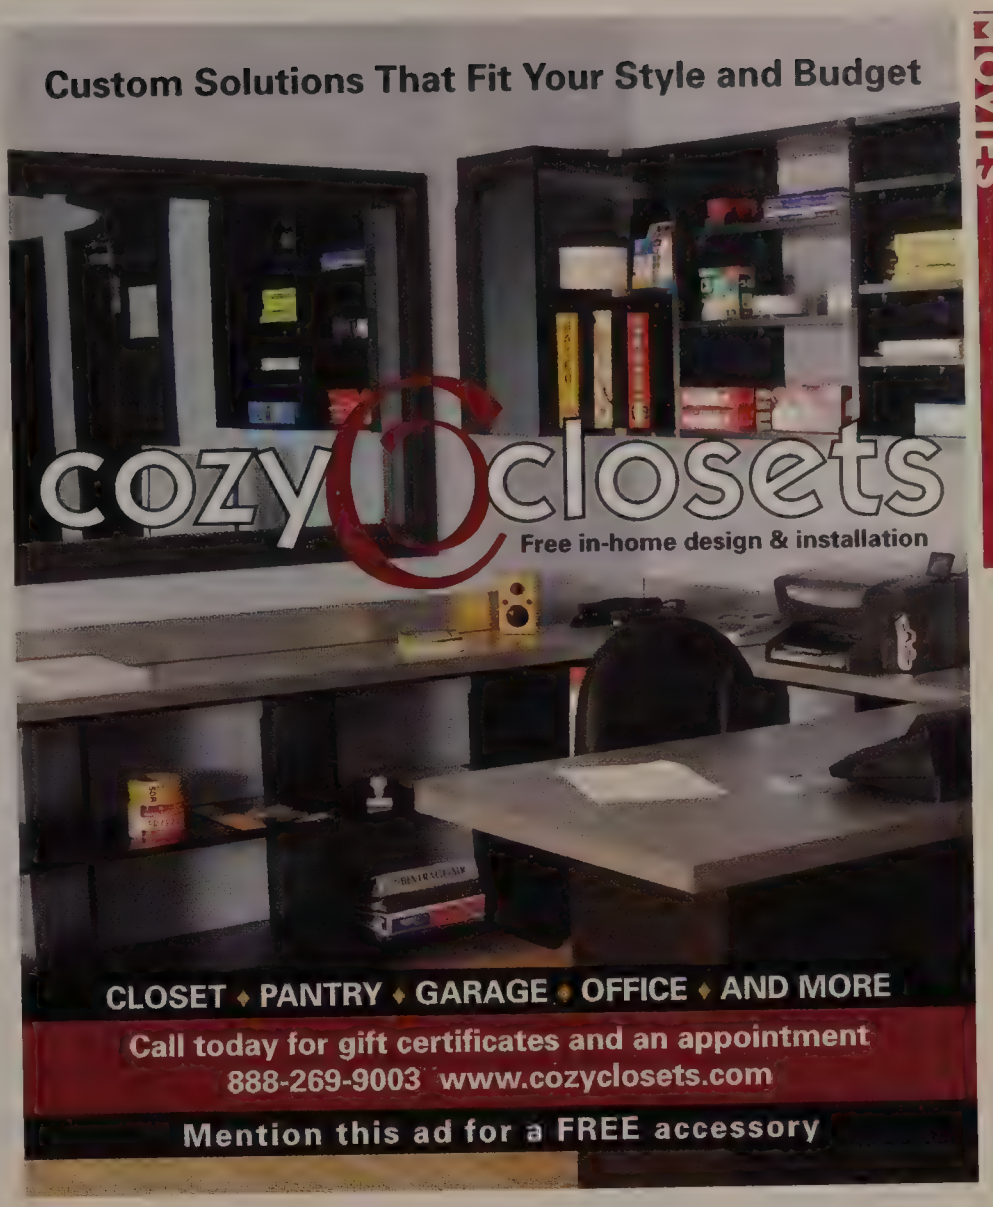
Curse of the Golden Flower ★★½

A visual orgy of blinding colors and ludicrously nate costumes, Zhang Yimou's latest finds the fil maker retreating further into lavish, empty spectac This campy, overwrought goof teeters between gra opera and soap opera, as aging action heartthr Chow Yun-Fat plays against type as a dastardly e peror, secretly poisoning his second wife (the ravis ing Gong Li) after discovering she's had a torrid aff with her stepson. Just don't ask what happened to t first Mrs. Emperor, as such queries seem to inspire slithering horde of scythe-wielding ninjas to plumm suddenly from the rooftops. Stuffed silly with betra als, incestuous alliances and enough lovingly ph tographed slow-motion hair-flips for a year's worth shampoo ads, Curse of the Golden Flower offers a fe giggly, melodramatic kicks. Such vast CGI armi overtake the palace's annual Chrysanthemum Fest val that the sheer scale of the thing becomes som thing of a joke. There's not much emotional attac ment, save for Zhang's gentle nod toward all t working stiffs who get stuck sweeping up the bodi and repotting flowers. (At Kendall Square.)

eamgirls ★★½
razzle-dazzle and very little soul, writer-director Condon's breathlessly anticipated (and even more ıthlessly paced) adaptation of the beloved Broad- musical frantically flings itself from one show- ıping number into another, never settling down z enough for us to become emotionally invested. A :kraking alternate history of Motown, Dreamgirls s Beyoncé Knowles as a Diana Ross–ish diva ıped to the forefront of a Supremes-esque group by Machiavellian Berry Gordy clone (Jamie Foxx, ɔrisingly inert here). Former American Idol contes- t Jennifer Hudson belts out the show's signature g, "And I'm Telling You I'm Not Going," with an th-shattering set of pipes, but her performance ns to shut down and go blank whenever she's not ed upon to sing. The largely novice cast lacks the :e of personality required to breathe life into these :k figures, save for an electrifying Eddie Murphy, o dominates every moment he's onscreen as a self- tructive James Brown/Marvin Gaye composite. ndon rushes headlong through the decades with h a bare minimum of characterization, this crowd- aser feels curiously empty. (At Boston Common, ıway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

ıe Good Shepherd ★★
bert De Niro imparts roughly the same level of en- y to his second directorial effort that he's brought to ıst of his movie roles in recent years. That's a gentle y of saying that the darn thing just lies there on the een. Matt Damon works some subtle wonders as ward Wilson, a fictional composite standing in for ranoid WASP America during the founding of the A. Segueing from Yale's secret Skull & Bones soci- to the Bay of Pigs invasion while surrounded by a of the same well-funded pals, Wilson's an emo- nal dead fish. The Good Shepherd wants to track the plosion of his spirit in service to God and country, t the character was already so closed off and sealed to begin with, there's not a lot to be lost over the urse of these three ponderous, bone-dry hours. A ıscast Angelina Jolie gets stuck in the thankless wife le, while cameos from De Niro's New York pals Alec ldwin and Joe Pesci only momentarily liven up the ıffy proceedings. (At Boston Common, Fenway, ırvard Square and in the suburbs.)

appy Feet ★★★
irector George Miller, the demented crackpot vi- ɔnary who brought us both The Road Warrior and ıbe: Pig in the City, has done it again with what is by the darkest, weirdest computer-animated talking- ıimal movie musical you're ever going to see. Elijah ood lends his voice to a misfit young penguin born a tle bit different and therefore unable to participate any of the bizarre mating rituals we all witnessed in ıat hit documentary last summer. Strange how March the Penguins left out the part where the flightless rds all sing jukebox oldies to one another. Cast out society by the stringent religious order governing is starving tribe, Wood's fluffy, tap-dancing sprite dis- ɔvers the giant, menacing outside world, and eventu- ily receives a healthy lesson in the cause-and-effect hain of environmental pollution. Happy Feet smug- les tons of coded progressive messages in between the azzling song-and-dance numbers, "virtually choreo- raphed" using motion-capture techniques by the sen- ıtional Savion Glover. There's a strong conservation ıoral here, as well as a few swift kidney punches to ur current religion-versus-science debate. Please ıote: Half a star has been subtracted due to Robin Williams' unfunny, offensive voice-over work as all the "ethnic" animals. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)



Letters From Iwo Jima ★★★★
Originally intended as a bookend to last October's flawed-but-worthy Flags of Our Fathers, Letters From Iwo Jima emerges as something far stronger, more unprecedented—perhaps even revolutionary. Only an American icon like Clint Eastwood could get away with making a WWII battle epic told from the losing side's point of view. (In Japanese with English subtitles, no less!) The filmmaking is spare and elegant. Tom Stern's washed-out cinematography drains the color from the frame, save for sharp stabs of crimson blood. The soundtrack offers a mournful piano dirge wherever lesser directors would opt for full orchestral bombast. But what'll stay with you for days afterward are those long, unbearable passages of time cramped in dark, frightening tunnels, racked by the distant thunder of explosions, as these frightened young men are left with nothing to contemplate but their own impending demise. Eastwood never once questions the necessity of this war; he seeks only to illuminate its cost, which in the hands of such a sensitive filmmaker becomes almost too horrible to bear. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Miss Potter ★★½
Babe director Chris Noonan embroiders the life of writer Beatrix Potter into a harmless little doily of a movie. Twee enough to trigger the gag reflexes of more-jaded viewers, it's also so good-natured and well acted that audiences less prone to sugar shock will eventually find themselves won over. Renée Zellweger trots out her Bridget Jones accent and works all sorts of variations on "adorable" as the slightly dotty, proudly unmarried author, glimpsed penning the adventures of Peter Rabbit and Jemima Puddle-duck while her cheery cartoon watercolors spring to animated life, keeping this lonely lady company all along the warmly photographed English countryside. Ewan McGregor sports a riotously unconvincing push-broom moustache as Potter's boyish publisher, but as their covert courtship proceeds, the two performers conjure a beguilingly innocent chemistry that's downright disarming. They get some strong support from Emily Watson's lumbering, manly sidekick, coded here as a lesbian in a bluntly evasive fashion. It's all perhaps a bit too pie-eyed and cutesy for its own good, but not unpleasant. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Notes on a Scandal ★★★½
This deliciously catty cup of arsenic-laced tea gives Dame Judi Dench her meatiest role in ages, starring as an acerbic, secretly needy schoolmarm spinster with a crush on Cate Blanchett's willowy, in-over-her-head art teacher. Adapted by acid-tongued playwright Patrick Marber from a novel by Zoe Heller, Notes on a Scandal is a viciously hilarious British piss-take on our own Mary Kay Letourneau saga. After Dench spies Blanchett rolling around the art-studio floor with a 15-year-old soccer hooligan, the cutthroat wench tries spinning the situation to her benefit in this twisted tale of emotional blackmail. The story is told through Dench's unintentionally revealing diary entries, read in a pitch-perfect voice-over by the actress while the Phillip Glass score provides an ironically comic counterpoint. Director Richard Eyre (who worked with Dench in Iris) maintains a brisk pace with a minimum of fuss. Blanchett has never been so achingly vulnerable, and Dame Judi is simply a talons-bared delight. Very naughty, but a lot of fun. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Emile Hirsch and Justin Timberlake play hapless thugs in Cassevetes' Alpha Dog

Pan's Labyrinth ★★★½
This boldly original grown-up fairy tale from visionary writer-director Guillermo del Toro boasts images of both shocking horror and stark, elemental beauty. In the dark days just after the Spanish Civil War, troubled, unwanted young Ofelia (the extraordinary Ivana Baquero) copes with awful circumstances by escaping into an imaginary dreamland full of fairies and folk legends that subtly reflect and refract the trauma of her harsh, day-to-day experiences. In other words, imagine Alice suffering under Franco's regime, and falling down a politically and metaphorically freighted rabbit hole into a Wonderland of teeth-gnashing monsters. The underrated auteur behind such eye-popping treats as Blade 2 and Hellboy, del Toro has a distinctive personal vision and a unique visual signature, qualities that for years have gone unheralded, thanks to the intelligentsia's snooty disdain for the horror genre. Besides offering sights that'll linger long in your dreams, Pan's Labyrinth includes a memorably terrifying performance from With a Friend Like Harry's Sergi Lopez, and a warm, heroic turn from Y Tu Mamá También star Maribel Verdu. (At Harvard Square and Kendall Square.)

Perfume: The Story of a Murderer ★★★
A jarringly nasty antidote to the big-budget, prestige period pieces that usually roll out this time of year, Run Lola Run director Tom Tykwer's adaptation of Patrick Süskind's notorious 1986 novel takes a discursive, sickly comic sniff at an 18th-century French serial killer. Born with a superhuman sense of smell but ironically no scent of his own, young Jean-Baptiste Grenouille (Ben Whishaw) sets about the city slaughtering red-headed virgins, packing them in animal fat and laboriously distilling their bodily odors into the ultimate perfume. Filmmakers as varied as Ridley Scott, Milos Forman and Martin Scorsese have attempted to wrestle Süskind's unwieldy allegory to the big screen, and according to legend even Stanley Kubrick deemed the story "unfilmable." Tykwer perhaps wisely leaves the intellectual heavy lifting on the page, opting instead for a shallowly enthralling, full-out olfactory overload; his camera rubs the viewer's nose in filth, squalor and the most ga-ga climax of any movie in years. John Hurt supplies the sardonic narration, and Dustin Hoffman overacts a glorious storm as an aging Italian fop. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Pursuit of Happyness ★★★
Italian director Gabriele Muccino's first English-language film is a tough-minded piece of work about a family slipping into poverty during Ronald Reagan's go-go '80s. Will Smith finally sheds his arrogance, graying his hair and underplaying nicely as the real-life Horatio Alger Chris Gardner, a sly go-getter who, despite having only a high school education and no experience, shot to the top of a competitive internship program at Dean Witter. But Chris never mentioned to his trading-floor colleagues that he also happened to be homeless, bouncing from train-station restroom to overcrowded shelter with his son (played by Jaden Christopher Syre Smith, the actor's own kid). It's startling to see Chris and his boy struggling hand-to-mouth, and Steve Conrad's screenplay doesn't skimp on their desperation. Muccino downplays the tale's inherent sap factor, and the tears he finally jerks are hard-earned indeed. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Rocky Balboa ★★½
Sentimental attachments go a long way toward redeeming Sylvester Stallone's sixth, comically tardy outing as everybody's favorite punch-drunk palooka. In other words, if you don't have fond memories of growing up with the earlier flicks, this one is going to feel like torture. Aimed expressly at old fans, Sly's valedictory to his signature character is stuffed to the sprocket holes with mawkish inspirational speeches and sledgehammer nostalgia. Depressed and down on his luck after the death of his beloved wife, Adrian, the Italian Stallion dons those trunks yet again for one final bout, taking on sleazy, spoiled hotshot Mason "The Line" Dixon (real-life former light heavyweight champ Antonio Tarver) for a publicity-stunt match. Embarrassingly personal, Rocky Balboa is more like a forum for writer-director Stallone to share some heartfelt, long-winded musings about his own ruined career and fear of obsolescence. It isn't really defensible at all, but there's also something sort of sweet and endearing about its naked, goofy sincerity. Even if Sly has never quite figured out how to direct an actual movie, I dare say there's still nobody better at assembling one hell of a stand-up-and-cheer training montage. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Volver ★★★
[illegible]tie translates as "To Return," a concept that [illegible] several sneaky ways throughout Pedro [illegible] relaxed, casually complex movie. Penél[illegible] never been better than she is in this twisted homage to Spanish telenovelas and Douglas Sirk melodramas. The plot is too complex and upside-down to even begin trying to explain, but what you'll be most struck by is Almodóvar's sheer, unabashed adoration of women. The movie has a rich, feminine glow to it. Almost all of the scenes take place while Pedro's women are preparing food, styling each other's hair or somehow nurturing one another. There's something almost primal about Almodóvar's vision of females as healers and caregivers—their community's life force. Though a bit overplotted and overlong, this is a very sweet film; a love letter to the kindness and resilience of ladies everywhere. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Karoline Herfurth is one of many scents in Tom Tykwer's Perfume: The Story of a Murderer.

Lairs of Melody

Grizzly Bear makes its home in experimental spaces.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

With dreamy, evocative texturing, Grizzly Bear's Yellow House sent ripples beyond the blogosphere late last year, surfacing on Top 10 lists from Pitchfork to the New York Times. The album took its name from band founder Edward Droste's childhood home, a yellow Victorian that served as Grizzly Bear's 2005 recording den, located—according to the Brooklyn quartet's own Web site—"just off Cape Cod."

However, while photos of antique rooms in the CD booklet were shot in a Woods Hole mansion, the yellow house is actually in Watertown. "Nobody talks about Watertown, but it's got the DMV and the mall, and good Armenian food," Droste says. "We might as well have been on Cape Cod. The neighbors weren't around, so we could play music any time of night. It was this steamy, languid Boston summer where everyone had probably escaped to Cape Cod or Maine.

"We really enjoy recording in a house space as opposed to a studio, just 'cause we like to work on our own time and have control," Droste says from his Brooklyn apartment, where he made Grizzly Bear's lo-fi 2004 debut Horn of Plenty.

Droste hails from a musical family where his aunt played the cello and both his mother and grandfather taught music, the latter in the music department at Harvard. "My parents and grandfather were listening to a lot of older choral music and classical composers," he says. "That stuff had its own influence, and then I was listening to my own indie-pop."

Yet he ended up at NYU to pursue creative writing and journalism. "I played guitar in high school and wrote some really bad songs, then forgot about music for a while 'cause I was so focused on college," says Droste, 28, who also traveled to Europe and Africa. Once in New York though, a breakup with a boyfriend nicknamed Grizzly [illegible] prompted him to start writing and recording music again.

Armed with ProTools software he learned while editing audio interviews for a documentary film company, Droste realized that ProTools gave him "the ability to sing tons of tracks over yourself, do effects in certain ways and edit them the way you want, in a way you never could with a four-track.

"I was never expecting to release that first album," Droste adds. "It was like a weird cathartic diary entry, and when I put it out, I thought we'd print maybe 200 copies and sell it locally." But the disc earned a buzz. Coincidently named drummer-singer Christopher Bear, who assisted on Horn of Plenty, drafted his own NYU accomplices to complete the group on tour. Daniel Rossen offered guitar, vocals and songs, while Chris Taylor provided woodwinds, bass, vocals and electronics, and went on to produce Yellow House.

"It's like our debut as a band, as collaborative musicians, as opposed to the first one being a solo bedroom project," Droste says. "I would never want to be a solo artist on the stage alone. I work better with other people challenging my ideas."

House-sitting in Watertown led to tensions as roommates, but their simpatico collages as musicians made it worth the trip. "Anyone could use the computer and add his own little bits to it," he says. "There was a lot of experimentation.

"We felt excited about these epic suites that went up and down and were heavily orchestrated and composed, but that weren't too fast and had room to breathe," says Droste, who introduced some songs as sketches. "'Colorado' was really bare bones, like a minute and a half long, just with the keyboard and vocal parts at the beginning. Everyone came up with this bombastic ending. It ended up being one of my favorite songs because it was the most collaborative."

Likewise, the haunting "Marla" slowed and elongated a waltz that Droste's great-aunt had recorded in the 1930s, plying woozy layers of piano, voice, strings and brushed drums.

"We always end up using elements of the environment around us, like this piano that was at my mom's house—we weren't expecting to have any piano on the album," adds the singer-guitarist. "And some of the percussion on 'Plans' were just the pots that were in my mom's kitchen.

"I feel that sonically, it ended up being really cohesive, even though the songs came from different places," he says of the album, which evokes the psychedelic-era Beatles as well as kindred indie-folk spirits Sufjan Stevens (partly through its mix of horns and banjo) and Animal Collective.

"We reinterpret a lot of the songs live, which we all think is crucial and fun," adds Droste, who predicts a more edgy Grizzly Bear at the Museum of Fine Arts' Remis Auditorium Feb. 2. "We don't like hearing a show that's exactly like the album. Plus we haven't had the funds to recreate the sounds from either album without a lot of people onstage." IB plays Feb. 2 at the Museum of Fine Arts.

rockie horoscope

JANUARY 24 – FEBRUARY 6, 2007 BY ROCKIE GARDINER

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

Even a shy, retiring Aquarius could be shoved into the spotlight while the creative sun, clear-thinking Mercury, idealistic Neptune and, before the goddess dives into Pisces on Jan. 27, magnetic Venus transit your sign. Make art; make sense; make love. This week, your nontraditional Uranus ruler and protective Jupiter complete the first of their three provocative squares. Be alert to opportunities to expand your universe and your reputation, courtesy of colleagues with money. You'll probably have to invest as well.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Divine inspiration is in store, as your Neptune ruler is contacted first by art maven Venus, then by discerning Mercury in Aquarius. The first meeting could be ethereal, possibly ecstatic; the second provides the words that best express your experience. Artists and poets should be thrilled. Dyed-in-the-wool romantics (the Pisces population in general) can begin their annual flirtation-fest as soon as magnetic Venus enters your sign on Jan. 27. For more info related to Uranus in Pisces, read for Aquarius, Sagittarius, Scorpio and Gemini.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Keep reminding yourself that until your Mars ruler leaves Capricorn at the end of February, you're likely to receive accolades for excellence. The red planet's exaltation in constructive, productive Capricorn enables you to take a more organized approach to your career and your everyday life. No shooting from the hip while the Warrior assumes the role of the Capricorn general. However, if you devise a better game plan, now would be the time to set it in motion. Otherwise, you might have to wait until Mars comes around again in two years.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Sociable, sensuous Venus could give you a chill while your planetary ruler faces restrictions laid down during her opposition to Saturn. Although you might prefer to "make nice" with the humanitarian Aquarius elite before Venus begins her swim through emotional, self-sacrificial Pisces on Jan. 27, Saturn in Leo has a "to-do" list waiting at home. Artists and musicians should find legitimate escape routes because now is when Venus and idealistic Neptune are getting together for one of their soul-searching sessions.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

The first of three challenging squares between expansive Jupiter in your partnership house and unpredictable Uranus in your career midheaven can set off shock waves in those areas. You're liable to experience an attack of nerves or unwarranted enthusiasm, but did you ever think you'd want to join the geek squad? Uranus rules the high-tech world; Jupiter loves to teach and preach. They'll do their dance in religious, philosophical, judicial and scientific circles until October. Publishing, too. Sometimes you join in; other times you get to watch.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

Try to stay grounded. Romantic Venus merging with impressionable Neptune in your Aquarius house of sex magic and joint checking accounts can transport you to dizzying heights—and then dump you. You might actually be thankful that cautious, constrictive Saturn in your Leo house of personal assets could cushion that fall by citing "lack of funds." No matter how the opposition affects you, know that your imagination can be held in check through the summer. It's not such a bad thing if you don't want to go over your budget.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Since it's earth-bound Saturn in your sign that's currently holding the fort, people might turn to you when they need a reality check. Be prepared to play the voice of experience to the young and foolish, to lend a helping hand to a questioning coworker or to step in where angels fear to tread. After all, while your sun ruler is in your Aquarius house of allies and cosmic soul mates, the light tends to shine brightly on the other guy or guys. Right now, Mercur Neptune and Venus are also bouncing around airy Aquariu

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

Like your mutable Gemini colleagues, Virgo tends to react instantly to whatever surprise is sprung when erratic Uranu in your Pisces house of significant others is challenged by Jupiter to be more truthful, more generous and more of a risk-taker. You could also be enticed to hop a flight or launc a site both with and without a partner. Mercury (your erstwhile ruling planet) helps you clarify your thoughts, especially about health-related matters, while it passes through Aquarius, the sign that thinks outside the box.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

As it deplaned from aeronautic Aquarius, your Venus ruler made strong connections to ethereal Neptune, earthbound Saturn and otherworldly Pluto. Look for representatives of these cosmic energies to show up in the next few days. One will inspire you, another can teach you how the real world works and the third might turn you into a closet case sexaholic. You'll probably feel like doing penance while Venus passes through the sign of the forgiving Fish from Jan 27 until Ash Wednesday. Mardi Gras, however, should be a blast!

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

You could sit up and take notice when "bigger is better" Jupiter in your Sagittarius money house gets zapped by trend-setting Uranus. This is the first of three challenging squares formed during 2007 by the planets interested in the wave of the future. Any idea that strikes you as fortuitous shouldn't be shelved. You might not get official confirmation until the second square at the end of October, but while Jupiter is retrograde for the summer, you'll be developing and refining your brilliant concept.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

Read for Scorpio for a timeline. Since your Jupiter ruler is planted in your own sun sign this year, its benefits are not limited to finances and assets. Any number of growth experiences in various areas of your life can take you to another level of personal development. Therefore, it's important that you recognize whatever eureka moment innovative Uranus presents during the first of its challenging squares this week. Whether you embrace it and make it your very own, only time, and the next two squares, will tell.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Conflicted over a money matter? Be it a small or a large potato, whenever tasteful, tactful Venus opposes your Saturn ruler, you need to step back and assess your latest desire. Will you be advocating peace and harmony or has a romantic fantasy already displaced common sense? Friends with money may figure into your latest communication, education or transportation project, but if you're acquiring expensive equipment, you'd better know exactly what you're doing. Their enthusiasm won't mean much if you're left to your own devices.

Pet Peeved

As you may or may not recall, Toby is the beautiful, affectionate, short-haired, black cat with orange eyes and little patches of white on his belly. You gave him up, and I adopted him this October. I often wonder how it would be possible to surrender such a splendid kitty. Well, don't lose any sleep over Toby's welfare—he's now living it up in Cambridge. He wanted a clean break from the past, so he changed his name to Roscoe and refuses to talk about his Arlington days. He's now living the good life: frequent cuddles, hamburgers off the grill, catnip wishes and kitty caviar dreams. In case you wanted to know.

Pizza, Hold the Misery

To that nasty old Regina bartender: What's your problem? Why oh why can't you be friendly like the other, young bartenders? Every time I'm there, all you're doing is swearing, banging and stomping. I've never seen you smile or say something nice to anyone. Your life must be miserable, because you certainly are. I hate picking up pizzas on Friday nights because I know I'll have to deal with you, and that just ruins my whole night. I'd rather go hungry. Maybe you could get a personality by hanging out with some of the younger staff; they're always smiling and having fun. You need all the help you can get!

—Pizza Out

Not to Be Goofy, But...

We were both escorting young folks to "Disney on Ice" on New Year's Eve and saw each other in the crowd, just long enough to exchange a smile of recognition. It's been a long time since our honors seminar at BC. Drop me a line; let me know how you've been doing.

Longwood Longing

It was so nice of you to hand me the sugar at Bruegger's on Longwood Avenue that morning. You were the striking brunette waiting 10 minutes or so for your cup of French roast. I was the guy in the black leather coat who commented on how poor the customer service was that morning. Your friendly spirit and beautiful smile really helped get my day off on the right foot that morning. I'd love to buy you the next cup of French roast. Let me know.

Thanks a Latte

Tuesday, the day after Christmas, 9 am, in a coffee shop near the financial district: I walked in tired after a heavy Christmas Day and a long drive, needing a coffee badly. You had one and gave me a delicious smile that still warms me. I thought (unfortunately slowly—with a lack of caffeine!) it was a smile full of promise. I got coffee quickly, with only one person in front of me, and chased after you, but you had gone. If I was right about the smile, I'd love to buy you a coffee, or two.

Prick of the Litter

For your information, I'm proud to drive a Mercedes. It took me years of hard work to be able to afford one. Consequently, I have an affinity for other Mercedes drivers. However, on Dec. 19, before 7 am, driving up 128 North in the Westwood area, I was appalled to see the male driver of a black CLK320 open his passenger window and toss a crumpled-up piece of trash out the window. I was riding in the Mercedes right behind him. Dude, I don't care if you're driving a Beemer, a Bentley or a bomber, you have no right to litter. Littering sucks and so do you.

—Ashamed

Pay It Forward

I was the scruffy-lookin' guy who got off the Green Line at Woodland late Friday night. You were behind me in line to pay for parking. I was the one who didn't know they don't take credit cards until after the guy, who didn't understand my question in English, ran my ticket through and said, vaguely, "Cash only" to the card in my hand. You heard that the nearest ATM was at the hospital, and instead of letting me hoof it, you offered me a $5 bill and just said, "I hope someone would do the same for me." So do I. And I thank you again. Happy New Year.

—Richer for It

Don't Discount My Heart!

At Filene's Basement in Downtown Crossing on Dec. 14 at about 1:45 pm: You were the beautiful Asian girl who came in and asked the man at the door where customer service was. We caught eyes briefly and when you looked away I couldn't help but continue to be taken by your presence. You may not have noticed the effect you had on me. I'd love to take you out for dinner and drinks. Hopefully, my new-year wish will come true! Me: SWM, 6 feet tall, dirty blond hair and blue eyes. I hope to hear from you.

—filenesbasementgirl@yahoo.com

Missed Manners

As a doorman at a large downtown hotel, I read with interest the letter from "Hostess With the Mostess" in the Dec. 6 Impersonals. I couldn't help but think about the everyday occurrences on my shift. Like when I open the door for folks and greet them only to be ignored as they walk through. Duh, gee, I didn't realize that "personal servant" was in my job description when I was hired. I ask them if they need assistance with directions, and am told rudely that they're all set, only to watch them walk in circles, come back, and with a straight face ask for assistance. Or when I open the door for an incoming female guest, only to be told that they do not need my help, they can get out by themselves—what's that all about? Obviously they're not accustomed to being treated with manners. How about when, after spending time flagging down a cab, I'm told by the guest, "I'd like to tip you, but I don't have any money," to which I reply when I'm pissed off, "Um, how were you going to pay for the cab at the airport?" as I walk away. I could go on. As a professional, you have to learn to roll with the punches, and yes, there are some nice people out there, but their ranks are getting thinner and thinner. Not everyone makes $50-plus an hour, and yes, we do rely on tips in the service industry. But how about some common sense and decency at least? I see the 20- to 45-year-olds as being the worst offenders. Some of these people are just plain miserable and ignorant, but there's no excuse for bad manners or etiquette. Smarten up, people.

Impersonal Assistant?

Mad love out to you lady, Letia Larok! I can truly feel the genuine and vivacious soul power flowing on the pages of the Music issue of the IMPROPER. The warm brown radiance of your sweet, gentle smile lingers mellowly in my eyes. You're one of Roxbury's finest talents, and royalty too! Big respect to you, and to all those female rappers bustin', slammin' rhymes for the conscious mind. Please, can I be the groupie to fetch your water and martinis? Holla back.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

While ice fishing in Wausau, Wis., Jennifer Kim reeled in the IMPROPER and Lindsay Puckett nabbed a fish the size of the Packers' chances of winning the Super Bowl in the next 20 years.

John Keefe took this photo on the shores of Kailua, Hawaii, which we bet is a lot more entertaining than taking a photo anywhere near Pauley Shore.

Josh Capilouto, Jon Hoffman and David Sheffer traveled to the Golan Heights on the Israeli-Syrian border, where they hoped Hazel Mae's presence could expedite peace talks for the region.

Congressman Peter Welch resides in Vermont, where we like to imagine he heads a ruthless maple syrup conglomerate.

Tom Wagner brought us diving off the coast of Bonaire—a Caribbean island named after Mike Seaver's best friend on Growing Pains.

PILOT TO CONTROL TOWER...

The Ritz-Carlton still knows how to pull out all the stops, hosting a holiday party in the function rooms of its new Avery Street hotel for frequent guests and VIPs.

The evening rivaled anything we've seen in these parts for a long time, with guests greeted by an endless serve-yourself sushi bar, walls covered in dense ivy, a room tricked out to look like a 1950s ski lodge (complete with fake stone fireplace and fur tablecloths) and another room that was done up all in white like a South Beach disco. On their way out, guests were encouraged to fill up plastic bags with a staggering assortment of penny candy, and everyone received a leather box with a picture-frame lid, which prompted one guest to say, "Well, that's one less Christmas gift to buy."

Needless to say, the eats couldn't be beat and the booze flowed freely. Among those seen lapping it all up were such regulars on the free-shrimp circuit as Ritz GM Erwin Schinnerl, newspaper publisher David Jacobs and his beloved bride, Gen Tracy, Broadway in Boston's Regan Byrne, Comedy Connection owner Bill Blumenreich and the toothsome Alithia Monroe, the naturally carbonated Doris Yaffe, white-hot interior designer Duncan Hughes, and numerous women wearing diamonds as big as the Ritz, including kabuki socialite Marilyn Riseman, who pointed at the jeweled cross around her neck and said, "Tonight I'm dressed as a nun—Sister Carella," to which someone replied, "More like Sister Cruella."

Among the evening's other amusing exchanges:

One guest said, "I'm having a party here on the 10th. What are you doing?" to which his friend replied, "Flying home from Brazil."

"Well," said the first guest, "just have them land the plane on the roof."

TIDINGS OF COMFORT AND JOY?

What's red and green and blue-blooded all over?

The Winter Ball, an intergenerational holiday hoo-ha to honor this year's crop of debutantes, who formed a receiving line welcoming guests into the ballroom of the Park Plaza.

The lovely young things who made their debuts last spring (at a ball known as the Cotillion) included Misses Sarah Babcock, Emily Banks, Kendall Dacey, Emily Forse, Alexandra Gardiner, Serena Marston, Amanda McGuire, Katherine and Victoria Morphy, Lucy Randall and Bennett Wilson. The crew who came to help celebrate featured the likes of department store heiress Hope Baker, Sherborn party pair Nicholas and Mary Kay Holder, Chestnut Hill doyenne Vicky (Mrs. Thomas Handasyd Perkins) Whitney and her daughters, Emily, Blake and Tory, the incandescent duo of Becca Spiro and Liz Shaw, junior smoothie Ted Talbot with his gorgeous date, Laura Will, and equally gorgeous mother, Michelle, brunette bombshell Julie Hume squired by the supersuave Phil Gordon, Connecticut socialites Krystian von Speidel and Nathan Frank, fun-loving newlyweds Chantelle and Darryl Sterling, the flawless Amory Minot, Greek goddess Mary Hios, Brookline Brahmin Michael Robbins and his daughter, Tish, whose husband couldn't make it because he was too tuckered out from shooting pheasants in England, and another woman who was asked why her husband wasn't there, to which she replied, "He had his partners' lunch at the Somerset Club this afternoon and he's too hungover to come."

At the Winter Ball, top row: Becca Spiro and Liz Shaw. Second row: Blake, Matthew and Vicky Whitney, Emily Dodger and Tory Whitney. Third row: Ted Talbot and Laura Will; Krystian von Speidel and Julie Hume. Bottom row: Chantelle and Darryl Sterling

Among the other remarks overheard, two self-appointed members of the fashion police criticizing one poor woman's outfit as follows:

"What was she thinking? Doesn't she own a mirror?"

"I know! That dress needs a curtain rod!"

However, the cattiest comment came from the man who looked at a couple on the dance floor and said, "I never realized having a seizure counted as dancing." IB

HAPPILY UNMARRIED

Every year we face the same challenge: narrowing down a huge list of eminently eligible bachelors and bachelorettes to 20 for this issue. That's good news for those of you who are still searching (and that's most of our readers); our research for this issue shows that this city's supply of dateworthy singles is plentiful.

As their bios attest, the men and women that made it into our pages this year (and every year) are not just pretty faces; they have interesting careers, histories and hobbies that make them people you want to know. And the group is diverse: Some are students while others work in business, the restaurant industry, music or art; some were raised in Boston, some grew up overseas. Overall, we think it's an enchanting crew that makes the single life look pretty good.

HEY, BARTENDER

It's that time of the year again. Time to turn your attention—and gratitude—to the consummate pros who keep the wheels of Boston nightlife merrily turning: bartenders. The deadline to nominate your favorites for THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN's 2007 Bartenders Issue is March 6. A nomination form appears on page 82 of this issue and on our Web site, www.improper.com.

A REVIEW WITH A CLUE

I want to express my thanks for the terrific insight given by Sean Burns in his film critiques. His review of Clint Eastwood's Letters From Iwo Jima, along with his salute to Robert Altman, exhibits his keen understanding of what he's talking about. Keep up the great work.

WHERE THE REAL MEN ARE

In regard to your recent Man Issue (Jan. 24), it was rather shallow and empty, just like the men of Boston. The real deal is here on the Cambridge side of the Charles Riviera!

EZ DOES IT

Ezra's article "If I Didn't Not Do It" (Dec. 20) left me simply laughing. In fact, I'm still laughing. Along with other countless articles in the IMPROPER, his column is one I eagerly await. He's the man.

NEW IN TOWN

A Regional Original

Chef David Ross talks a good talk about his menu at Sasso, the new upscale Italian eatery in the Back Bay. "The food we create here is very simple," he begins, with conviction. "Farm-fresh, without too much preparation or busy-ness." For example? "A roast chicken." Check. "A simple steak with truffled risotto and broccoli rabe." Check? "San Daniele prosciutto served with a roasted vegetable–goat cheese terrine." Now hold on a sec....

After the roast chicken ($28) and the steak (tenderloin, $36; strip, $42), the starter of artisanal cured ham with veggie terrine ($13) may indeed be the least complicated item on the menu. But calling rarefied fare like crudo misto (a trio of yellowfin tuna with blood orange and zabaglione, basil-marinated kampachi and scallop-melon ceviche, $14) and roasted duck with winter squash, potatoes, pancetta, peas and cipollini onions ($15) simple is a stretch by anyone's count. And those are just appetizers. The entrée side of the menu brings even more ambitious culinary footwork: sogliola (sole rollatini with salt cod–root vegetable purée and served with escarole and lemon-parsley pesto, $30) and rack of venison with mostarda fruit glaze, braised Tuscan kale and sage-roasted potatoes ($38). Even the mac 'n' cheese is showstopping, with chunks of lobster sautéed in a carbonara sauce with pancetta and fresh peas ($36).

Such sophisticated cooking takes a steady hand, which Ross has demonstrated deftly as chef at Lucca, the high-end Italian spot in the North End owned by the same group (Matthew Williams, Sean Williams and Ted Kennedy). While Lucca's menu holds steady in northern Italy, Sasso's menu roves all over the boot. "Regional Italian works very well with Boston's varied climate," says Ross. "Winter may take us to Piedmont and Lombardy, with heavy braises and root vegetables. In the summer, we can go to southern Italy—tomatoes, etc." The wine list reflects that outlook, with bottles (and glasses) from Umbria, Piedmont, Alto Adige, Tuscany and Friuli, among other far-flung Italian regions.

Dramatically presented grub of this caliber deserves an appropriate setting, and the breathtaking space that recently housed the now-shuttered Blackfin Chop House fills the bill. With its soaring atrium ceiling, two-story windows, marble staircase and dark woods, the space feels like one of those staged restaurants you see only in TV shows and movies. The cozy bar's the spot for tucking into the late-night menu—served until 1:30 am—and enjoying truly novel specialty cocktails, like the Green Tea Martini (green tea vodka, passion fruit, papaya-infused green tea and mint, $14) and the Spiced Cherry Martini (vanilla vodka and sour-cherry puree, $14).

Simple, complex or somewhere in between, the food at Sasso follows Ross' kitchen credo of giving people what they're hungry for: "What's key is to 'cook for a crave,'" says Ross. "That's what keeps people coming back." 116 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-247-2400). —JH

INNER VIEW

Amazing Grace

Nobody epitomized '60s free-lovin' spirit like Jefferso Airplane lead singer Grace Slick. After decades in the roc world, she's turned her eyes to visual art. Slick's painting and other works are on display at the Wentworth Gallerie in Burlington and Chestnut Hill. She'll be in Burlington t promote her work Feb. 17 and in Chestnut Hill Feb. 18.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: What was it like being a '60s icon

Grace Slick: It was great. We made our own rules, an there was no hype. All we had to do was show up and do ou thing, and we didn't even have to show up sober. But it wa also a form of expression, a reaction to the rigid '50s. Ever damn song out of that era was about personal love.

IB: What are your fondest memories of Woodstock?

GS: The only thing great about Woodstock was that half-million people showed up. Other than that, it sucked The weather was shitty, and it rained the whole time They had to helicopter us in and out of the venue ever day, so we didn't get to see anyone else perform.

IB: How would you describe your art?

GS: Elaborate cartoons, colorful, simple. It's in-your-face, and you don't have to wonder what it is. There's humanity to it, like rock 'n' roll.

IB: What inspired you to tour with your artwork?

GS: My agent. Touring is a part of the art world. Frankly, I'd rather stay home and just paint. I've been on the road for the last 85,000 years! But that's what I've got to do. Flying is a big-ass drag now. I used to like it. The band would go first-class, we could drink and smoke and do drugs on the planes, and the stewardesses would party with us, too. The boys used to screw them in the bathrooms and then give them backstage passes for the shows.

IB: You paint pictures of animals and other rock stars. Which are your favorites?

GS: My animal prints. I was asked to do the prints of celebrity friends, and [at first] I didn't want to do it. I thought, "Oh, isn't that cute—a former rock star draws her rock star friends." But now I like it.

IB: Are you keeping up with your songwriting?

GS: No, I'm not a multitasker. It's always been one job, one man, one child. I have to do one thing at a time, and right now it's painting. Plus, I don't like it when old people in rock 'n' roll get back on stage. They look silly. —Leslie P. Kilgore

TASTY TIDBITS

The Celebrity Chef Shuffle

Next of Ken... In Boston's dog-eat-dog dining scene, it can be near-impossible to compete against the likes of, say, Ken Oringer's critically acclaimed Clio. One way: Hire Oringer himself. The owners of Spire—the Nine Zero Hotel's swanky restaurant—have done just that. This spring, Oringer (of Clio, Uni and Toro fame) will take over the kitchen, revamp the menu and hire a chef de cuisine to carry out his new concept for the place. The early word is "high-end steakhouse," and plans call for Spire to close for two weeks in April before reopening with an overhauled design—and a brand-new name. Stay tuned.

Jody Adams

Rialto Reinvention... In other celebrity-chef-makeover news, Jody Adams has followed through on her threat to scrap the menu that's made Rialto one of the city's best restaurants for the last decade. When Adams split from her Sapphire Group partners last year, she vowed to reinvent the restaurant according to her own personal vision. After a few weeks of tinkering, Rialto reopens Feb. 9 with a new Italian identity and a spruced-up décor. "The Mediterranean style of Rialto was great, but the food and culture of Italy have always been true to my heart," Adams told the IMPROPER. "It just seemed like the right time to reinvent both Rialto and myself." The menu features hearty Italian treats like tomato-and-farro lasagna, braised pork cheeks with heirloom polenta and (her favorite) spaghetti with lobster. But how are rabid fans of Rialto's legendary slow-roasted duck going to get their fix now? In a wise peacekeeping move, Adams plans to safeguard a few of the old Rialto signature items—including the famous duck—in a menu section called Rialto Classics. 1 Bennett St., Cambridge (617-661-5050). www.rialtorestaurant.com.

Tasters' Choice... When Todd English shuttered his Wellesley Figs location, local foodies were left with just one celebrity chef (Ming Tsai at Blue Ginger). But now equilibrium is restored. In mid-January, Michael Schlow (Radius, Great Bay, Via Matta) extended his reign of terrific-tasting cuisine to the 'burbs with the opening of Alta Strada, a 100-seat Italian restaurant and market, in the same space. Don't expect gussied-up Italian plates à la Via Matta. This is casual fare, with a modest menu of pastas, pizzas and antipasti, plus daily entrée specials. No time to dine in? Check out the soon-to-open market, where Schlow proffers prepared foods for home dining. 92 Central St., Wellesley (781-237-6100).

A Spoonful of Sagra... Fresh off a two-year stint at the North End's Bricco, chef Robert DeSimone is the man behind Sagra, the latest addition to the Somerville scene. The 120-seat Italian eatery replaced the recently closed 400 Highland, with entrées topping out at $20. Experience isn't the only thing DeSimone took from Bricco. His former boss, Marisa Iocco, is on board as a consultant. 400 Highland St., Somerville (617-625-4200).

Thai One On... Allston Village's eclectic dining mix got a boost last month with the arrival of Bo Thai Café. Aside from a hearty helping of puns, Bo Thai offers a basic selection of Thai staples—drunken noodles, pad thai, chicken satay and more. Even better: Its delivery zone extends to Cambridge and Boston. 433 Cambridge St., Boston (617-779-8424). —Rich Levine

BEAUTY BUZZ

You Are My Candy Girl

When it comes to beauty rituals, we've slathered on and sloughed off just about every "it" ingredient—pumpkin, papaya, vitamin C, seaweed, caviar and mushrooms. Chocolate—the universal cure for, well, everything—is this season's spa sweetheart. Salon Euphoria's Chocolate-Dipped Cherry Facial, $85, starts with a facial cleansing and an all-natural cherry peel to exfoliate and finishes with a wasabi-infused, chocolate mask. If you treat yourself on Valentine's Day, you'll even leave with a rose. Beaucáge Salon & Spa's Rose Petal Pedicure and Chocolate Facial, $205, is a double dose of indulgence without the sugar high. Following a rose petal foot fusion, you're led to a treatment room for a chocolate fête for your face—an organic Hungarian cocoa mask. Violet Skin Boutique offers the ultimate experience, the four-hour Chocolate Indulgence, $313. First, an organic chocolate facial, then a chocolate body wrap, complete with a chocolate/amaretto scrub and soothing chocolate soufflé mask. The sensual session finishes with an hour-long aromatherapy massage. Now that's the stuff of which fantasies are made. Salon Euphoria, 44 School St., Boston, 617-742-7951, www.saloneuphoria.com; Beaucáge Salon & Spa, 71 Newbury St., Boston, 617-437-7171, www.beaucage.com; Violet Skin Boutique, 257 Newbury St., Boston, 617-262-7546. www.violetskinboutique.com.

Back in the Big House... When the Big Easy eased out of the Alley in January, local club kids went into mourning. But the two-story booty-shaking haven finds new life starting Feb. 9 as Mansion, an upscale nightclub and lounge. The space still boasts the spacious atrium and wraparound balcony, but the renovated interior looks conspicuously more grand (dare we say "mansion-like"), with baroque accents, oversized fireplaces and cool custom furniture. Mash Up Mafia is slated as resident DJ and the all-girl singing and dancing group, Honey, performs on weekends. Bye, bye, Big Easy; hello, Big House. 1 Boylston Place, Boston (617-351-7000).

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

Always Enjoy Responsibly. www.stellaartois.com

RUNNING MAN

Marathon training's a real pain.

When it comes to the Boston Marathon, people fall into three groups: those who don't care at all; those who view the marathon as an excellent excuse to get drunk on a Monday morning; and those total wackjobs who actually lace up their sneakers somewhere near Worcester and run to Copley Square. Care to guess which group I fall into? I'll give you a hint: I like my Bloody Mary spicy.

But my wife, Heather, is into the marathon thing. She's run the Boston and Chicago marathons, and right now she's training to run Boston again in April. There are many, many reasons why I'll never run a marathon, but the training regimen's at the top of the list. Every Saturday, Heather gets up before sunrise and runs at least 10 miles. No part of that equation sounds appealing, from the getting up early to the spending two hours outdoors in Boston in January. So naturally, last weekend I decided to join her on a 12-mile run.

I normally run three miles a few times a week, but I don't do it for the love of running. I do it so I can drink beer without turning into John Goodman. The farthest I've ever run was about seven miles, and that's because I got lost. So why would I roll out of bed and subject myself to a 12-mile run? Because I want to better understand the woman with whom I share my life, and gain insight into one of her passions. Because I want to support her in a challenging endeavor. But mainly because I want to brag that I ran 12 miles.

On the appointed morning, Heather's not especially sure that I'll make it. "Bring your cell phone," she says, "so we'll be able to meet up afterwards." Thanks for the vote of confidence, honey.

A motley group of would-be marathoners meets at 1 Beacon St. for the morning's run. I'd imagined Heather's running crowd would be mostly Kenyans and men wearing nylon short-shorts, but actually, it seems like it's predominantly women in their 20s. Guys, here's a free tip from me to you: If you want to meet toned-up runner girls, come to 1 Beacon St. on Saturday mornings. You don't even have to run. You can just hang out, offer to help with partner stretching and drop lines like, "Hey, can I buy you a packet of energy gel?"

Just after 8 am we're off and trotting down Beacon Street en masse. Our destination is the Boston College dorms in Newton. I'm discouraged by the very idea that I'm running to Newton, but I'm heartened by a look at some of my fellow runners—if the white-haired guy wearing wrestling shoes can do it, so can I. Possibly. By the first water stop, at the Holiday Inn in Brookline, a light rain is falling. Pleasant. At least the wind-whipped water droplets stinging my face are distracting me from the fact that I've already plodded as far as one of my normal runs, and I'm only a fourth of the way there. Heather falls in with some girls and they start chatting away as they run. I'd join in the convo, but I'm preoccupied with the business of writhing in my own private hell. My quads are suffused with a dull ache, my toes are crowding the edges of my shoes, and it feels like my feet have swollen to about size 14. And we're not even halfway done.

So, what do women talk about during a two-hour run, you ask? Well, at a water stop one girl asks Heather, "Is your hip bothering you a little? I can tell from your gait… I really want your figure, though." Women can talk about each other's bodies like that—the equivalent of "Hey, I was just checking out your bum, and it's A-OK!"—and it's totally innocuous. Meanwhile, the entirety of my conversation with other dudes on the run occurs when one guy says, "Cool shoes, bro." I reply, "Thanks." And if you think that complimenting another guy on his shoes might be kind of gay, then you haven't seen my running shoes. They're black and orange and look like they belong on a scarecrow in a CVS Halloween display. Complimenting my shoes is the straightest thing you can do this side of founding a nudie magazine and wearing a bathrobe till you're 98 years old.

After the last water stop, my legs want no more of this. Somehow I get them moving again, carrying me slowly back toward downtown. Man, I'd kill a drifter for an iPod right about now (and, since we'll soon run through the Charlesgate area, I may get an opportunity to do just that). I didn't bring my iPod because Heather said they're verboten in the marathon, and I wanted to make my minimarathon as miserably realistic as possible. My problem isn't so much that I need pump-up music, but more that I have Hinder's "Lips of an Angel" stuck in my head. You may ask why I chose to listen to Hinder's "Lips of an Angel" in the first place. That's an excellent question.

THERE ARE MANY REASONS WHY I'LL NEVER RUN A MARATHON, BUT THE TRAINING REGIMEN'S AT THE TOP OF THE LIST

In the car on the way to 1 Beacon, Hinder came on the radio and I noticed that, after the first chorus, both the music and lyrics morph into an '80s hair-metal ballad. Now I'm pondering how awesome it'd be if Def Leppard or Poison could re-release this song. Imagine Bret Michaels tackling lyrics like, "Girl you make it hard to be faithful/ With the lips of an angel." I'm 90 percent certain that Hinder snuck into Def Leppard's bus and stole a notebook containing "Lips of an Angel" sometime during the Hysteria tour. If you think of "Lips of an Angel" as a lost hit from the '80s instead of a mediocre new Top 40 track, you'll enjoy it 100 percent more—which is to say, you'll want to plug your ears with your fingers rather than ice picks. And if all this sounds like a deranged rant, then you're beginning to understand what happens to the human mind after an hour and a half of running.

My mental state could be worse, I suppose. Last year I read an article about a long-distance cyclist who literally goes insane during his rides, because it's the only way he can keep pedaling through the pain. He thinks assassins are attacking him and he screams obscenities at his support team. I can now understand where that guy's coming from. I run up the handicap ramps at intersections because I can't lift my feet over curbs any more. When I have to stop for traffic, all feeling goes out of my legs, as if they belong to someone else. And the girls keep chatting, as if they' sitting at a bar sipping appletinis instead wrapping up 120 minutes of cardio.

After the soul-crushing slog up Beac Hill, we're finally at One Beacon. I've r 12 miles, but at what cost? Back in t garage after the run, I almost ram the c straight into a cement wall. I was trying reverse slowly out of the parking spac but it's hard to distinguish the gas ped from the brake when you can't feel yo legs. (By tomorrow, I'll soon learn, I' wish I couldn't feel my legs.)

So now I've run almost a hal marathon, and I've gotta say, I still don get it. Running isn't fun, no matter ho far you go. Heather herself acknowledg that the last time she ran the Bosto Marathon, she was crying in pain o Heartbreak Hill. That sounds like some thing you'd want to sign up for agair doesn't it? So I ask her why she's subject ing herself to this misery, and she replie "I don't know. Because I'm bored?" S there you have it. Living with me is s boring that you'll want to run 26.2 mile just so you can feel something, anything even if that something is searing pain.

My day of marathon training taught m something else, besides the fact that m wife hates me. It gave me first-hand per spective on the challenge of running fron Hopkinton to Copley Square, and that in sight underscores the importance of sup porting the people you love as they fac this superhuman test of willpower and en durance. So this year, come April 16, I'm going to be right by Heather's side.

At least, I'll be by her side at the mo ment when she runs past my table at Vox She'll be straining for the finish line more than 25 miles of pavement behind her, and I'll raise my beer and proudly de claim, "Have I told you about the time I ran 12 miles?" IB

THAT'S RICH

Still Ill From Indy

Reflections on a trip to the AFC Championship

I remember when the ball went through Buckner's legs back in 1986, but to be honest, it didn't affect me too much. Sure, I was upset, but I was also young enough to have gotten over it by the time the next episode of Thundercats came on.

With that being said, the single worst feeling I've ever had as a Boston sports fan—not including any of the times I had to use one of the old communal urine troughs at Fenway—was after the 2003 ALCS.

When Grady Little blew that game, it crushed me in a way I could never have imagined. And while I eventually moved on, that unbearable hurt over coming so close to such a monumental victory, only to have it so quickly and painfully ripped away, forever changed me as a Sox fan. The lows were never quite as low, and the highs (sadly enough, even the World Series win) were never as high. Part of me is scared the same thing just happened with the Patriots.

I don't get the feeling the AFC Championship loss in Indianapolis affected the city of Boston like that ALCS did—I doubt anything ever will—but for me it was pretty damn close.

As I'm writing this, the rest of the NFL has already forgotten about the Patriots; they're fully entrenched in the annual tradition of running boring Super Bowl story lines into the ground. In fact, by the time you read this, the Super Bowl will already be over—and I can only hope Peyton Manning's head will be sitting on a mantle at Brian Urlacher's New Mexico ranch—but I know I'll still be thinking about Indianapolis.

Maybe I can't let go because I was there. Three of my buddies and I made the trip to Indiana, and spending a weekend in enemy territory made the AFC Championship feel like more than just a game.

At 3:30 am on Sunday, we almost got into a fight with a group of local inbreds at a White Castle (the only place to eat after 11 pm in that godforsaken city) who started firing French fries at us when they found out we were Pats fans. On Sunday afternoon while we were drinking at Buffalo Wild Wings during the Saints/Bears game, a woman told us to "get out and go find another bar" when we asked her to take her drink off the Silver Strike Bowling machine. For 48 straight hours we walked around to a chorus of boos. And no, they weren't saying, "moooovers"—these were loud, screaming boos.

On the other hand, for one weeken hordes of random dudes we'd never met b fore and probably won't ever see again b came our best friends in the world, becaus they happened to be wearing a Tedy Brusc or Troy Brown jersey. It wasn't the Master but the whole trip was still an experien unlike any other.

I never wanted the Patriots to win a gam so badly. And they had it won. Between th first and third quarters I must've called an texted my dad 15 times. We were going t Miami for our fourth Super Bowl, and it wa going to be so sweet.

We'd find those hacks from White Cas tle and shower them with open ketchu packets. We'd track down that old bat fron the bar and tell her where she could pu that drink.

Of course, none of that happened. A we made the 10-block trek from the RC Dome back to our hotel, I felt like a hung over college chick walking back to m dorm on a Sunday morning wearing an oversized T-shirt and a pair of lacross shorts. It was the most degrading walk of shame you could imagine. We got back to the room and I just lay on my bed, as every fire truck and ambulance in Indianapolis let their sirens blare for hours.

I JUST LAY IN MY BED AS EVERY FIRE TRUCK IN INDIANAPOLIS LET THEIR SIRENS BLARE FOR HOURS.

It still hurts. Listen, I heard that cheesy song "Over My Head" by the Fray on the radio the other day and started thinking about the Patriots. I'm a goddamn mess. And while I wish I could just watch an episode of Thundercats and pretend Indy never happened, that's not an option any more. The only thing I can do is pray that this game doesn't do to my love of the Patriots what 2003 did to my love of the Sox.

I just hope that when the 2007 season kicks off—and I wouldn't be surprised if it did so with a Patriots-Colts rematch—that I'll still care as much as I do now. IB

THE DANCE

BY JOHN D. SPOONER

Idol Worship

Even the Hub of the Universe revolves around the stars.

We pretend to take no notice of celebrity in Boston. "Why would you bother looking a fool," an old, crusty Bostonian said to me some years ago, "by toadying to someone who actually lets their picture run in the newspaper?" Boston prides itself on publicly ignoring celebrity, except for sports figures, but our town secretly worships at this altar, just like the rest of the country. Same church, different pews.

I thought of the celebrity game as I watched the funeral for Gerald Ford. After his administration, Ford was on the board of my then employer. At a firm boondoggle in Bermuda, my wife was scheduled to sit next to the former president at dinner on the last night. It was to be an outdoor celebration, a barbecue—until the winds came, with rain slanting sideways, canceling the dinner and my wife's chance at grilling the president. "You can grill me," I offered.

"You don't have Secret Service protection," she said.

The next morning, my wife ran into the president and Betty Ford at breakfast, where she mentioned the lost dinner opportunity. Gerald Ford said, "My loss was probably a lot bigger than yours. Wouldn't you agree, Betty?"

"Absolutely," she said. We've told the story for years.

No crowd in the Boston area dumps on the cult of celebrity more than certain residents of Cambridge. Unless it's their kind of celebrity. At a Cambridge party celebrating a wedding engagement, I actually heard someone say to John Updike, possibly our country's greatest man of letters, "And what do you do?" The ultimate attitude, coming from a person who must've known what Updike did for a living, considering his most commercially successful novel, Couples, had just been published. The drinks flowed on into the evening until it was discovered that Updike and his wife had recently returned from Greece on a holiday. The host put on bouzouki music in honor of this. The lights were dim at the party, but everyone was well lit. Furniture was pushed aside and the guests got into the Hellenic spirit, kicking and snapping their fingers. The crowd who disdained celebrities forced Updike and his wife into the center of the dance, and as the couple perfectly executed their steps the others kept clicking and kicking, circling the objects of their adoration, an almost ritualistic ceremony. Sure beats the hell out of watching clips of Britney, Lindsay and Paris.

Some time ago, I wrote in an advic book that everyone who works in sale should have a celebrity story to tell. It e tablishes you as a character, someone wh has some experience in life outside of jus marketing widgets. I'm certainly guilty loving to hear other people's stories. As lifelong Bostonian, I'm contemptuous celebrity, but not above reveling in when I've got one in my sights. Of course as long as it's someone like John Updike you can rationalize groveling because he a "fellow intellect."

I had a more recent brush with the kin of person it's okay to adore in Boston. I ha a golf game at a local course with Jac Nicholson, when he was here filming Th Departed. The club where we played is discreet place, calling no attention to any thing but the lure of the sport. Jack wa wearing long chinos on a day that was ove 100 degrees and humid. "Standards," h said to me. How could the coolest dude i Hollywood ever be wearing shorts? Hi home club's rules, in true movie-town illu sion, demand that all players wear prope long pants. Go figure.

Only the head golf pro knew tha Nicholson was to be playing that day, s no one crowded around on the first tee watching the action. Our foursome qui early, after 11 holes, long after Jack ha said to me in the brutal heat, "Johnn boy, I'm dyin' out here." It was unbearabl and we came in, shooting the breeze i the locker room bar for a while, until m playing partner and I walked him to hi white stretch limo, parked near the poo area. Waiting patiently in the parking lo were dozens of people of all ages—fro kids to grandparents—many in bathin suits on that July day.

"This is a very low-key place, Jack," said to him. Then, all the people bega yelling, "You're the greatest, Jack! We love you, Jack!" He just gave me that killer grin looked at his fans, then did a little ta dance for them and gave them the victor sign, which brought cheers. Jumping int the back of the massive white stretch, he disappeared into the summer haze. A ma I knew came over and said to me, "How you get Nicholson to play with you?"

I gave him my killer grin. "Standards I said. IB

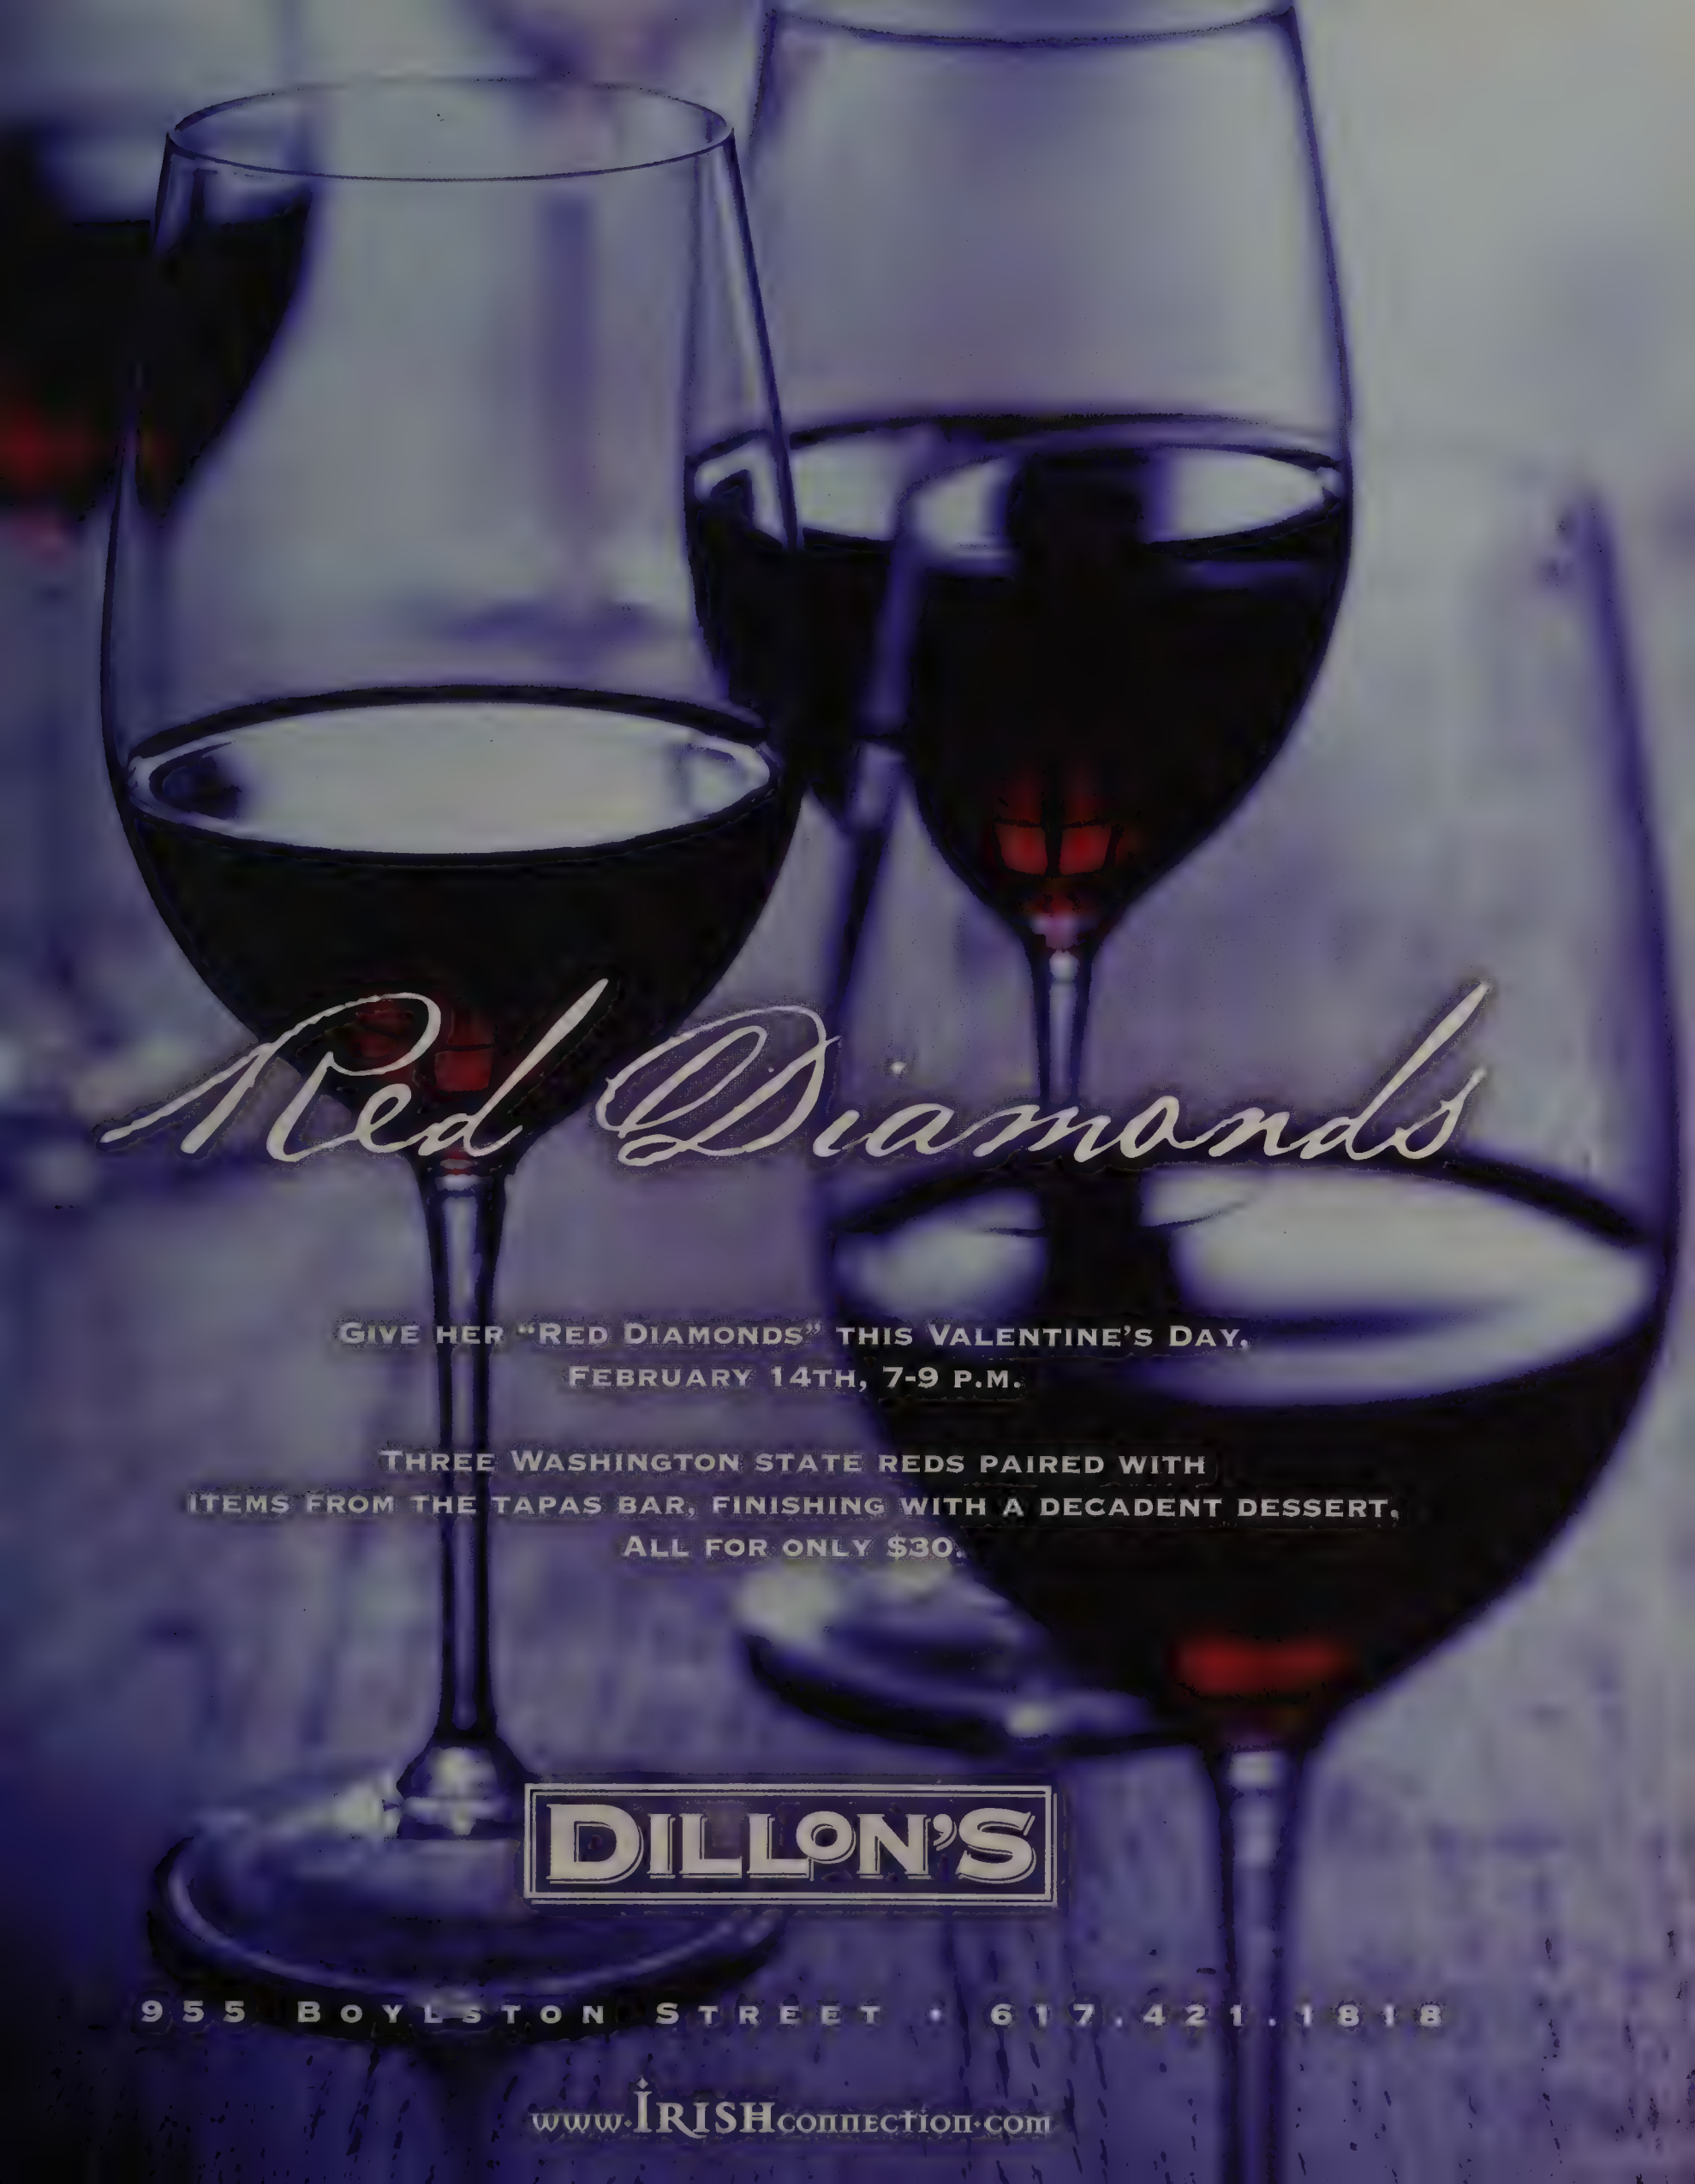
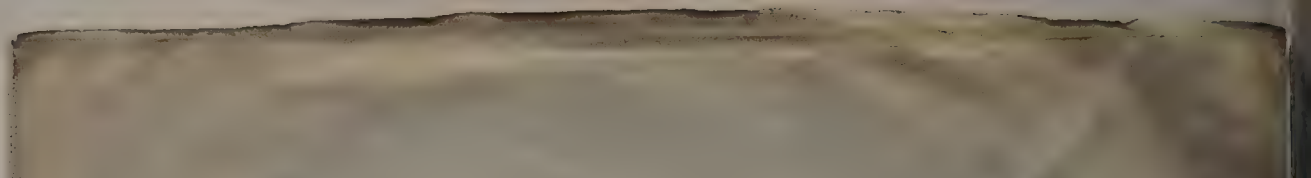
Soroff ON

TED ALLEN

BY JONATHAN SOROFF





Food and wine expert and (the brainy) one of the Queer Eye for the Straight Guy's "fab five," Ted Allen will appear Feb. 10 and 11 at the Boston Wine Expo at the Seaport World Trade Center. A native of Columbus, Ohio, he received a bachelor's degree in psychology from Purdue and a master's in journalism from New York University. A former journalist, he has written for the Chicago Sun-Times, Condé Nast Traveler, Travel + Leisure, GQ, Self and Men's Journal, and he has profiled such luminaries of the food world as Martha Stewart, Mario Batali and Charlie Trotter. As a contributing editor to Esquire, he has profiled such celebrities as James Caan, Hugh Grant, Drew Barrymore and Barry White, and has cowritten the magazine's "Things a Man Should Know" column, which spawned a series of books. On Queer Eye, he coaches makeover subjects on food, wine and entertaining skills. He's also the author of The Food You Want to Eat: 100 Smart, Simple Recipes. In 2004, Purdue awarded him with a Distinguished Alumnus Award. He lives with his longtime partner in New York City.

Jonathan Soroff: OK, my first question is…
Ted Allen: Nine inches!
JS: I wasn't exactly going there, but that's impressive. So if you were on death row, what would you want as your final meal?
TA: What really sucks about death row is you can't have wine. But I think the most delicious thing you can ever eat is not foie gras or truffles or caviar or any of that overpriced fetishized food. It's a perfectly ripe, big, red juicy tomato from August.
JS: Single most important kitchen tool?
TA: There are three, but the most important is your chef's knife. The other two are your cutting board and your sauté pan. You can cheap out on every other pot and pan but a good sauté pan is crucial so that it heats evenly. As for the cutting board, I've gone to so many houses where they have those glass cutting boards with a nubbly surface on one side. You might as well whack your knife against the sidewalk.
JS: Single most important spice?
TA: Well, salt. Unless you have a heart condition, in which case, my sympathies, good cooking requires the appropriate use of salt.
JS: How do you feel about fat substitutes?
TA: If you don't mind eating a potato chip that requires a medical disclosure about loose stools, then rock on. I'm all for science, but food that's weird and been engineered by somebody in a lab coat is probably going to give you cancer twice as fast as butter will give you a heart attack.
JS: Best seduction food or recipe?
TA: For me, it would be rack of lamb with rosemary and garlic or maybe thyme, if you wanna go fancy. If you want to be more down-to-earth and comfort-y, I like fried chicken and champagne. It's a great combo.
JS: Three things every man should know how to cook?
TA: I'll say pancakes, roast chicken, and bacon and eggs. If you're not into cooking, you can always take your date out for dinner, but if you really succeed, you're going to have to make breakfast, too.

"YOU CAN ALWAYS TAKE YOUR DATE OUT FOR DINNER, BUT IF YOU REALLY SUCCEED, YOU'RE GOING TO HAVE TO MAKE BREAKFAST."

JS: Things you always have in the fridge?
TA: Butter. Colman's mustard. Champagne. Probably a sauvignon blanc. Some 100 percent fruit spread because I like peanut butter and jelly. And cheese. Lots of cheese.
JS: Who has the hardest job on the show?
TA: Thom [the interior designer]. I could say Jai, because we're not quite sure what his job is, but Thom has the most to do.
JS: Who has it the easiest?
TA: Me, because food and wine are limitless. I could do a hundred episodes on wine, or we could talk about beer, or I could do a seven-course dinner. Coming up with something new is never a problem for me.
JS: Most disgusting food you ever ate?
TA: Probably something I cooked. Before I knew anything about food, I once marinated a beef tenderloin in something acidic for like six hours, which basically turned it into a beef smoothie.
JS: How about most exotic thing?
TA: I've had sea urchin on Iron Chef. Didn't care for it. Y'know, everyone's always looking for the next insane, exotic thing to eat.... I'm not afraid to try anything, but most of that stuff just doesn't taste good.
JS: If you were stuck on a deserted island with a chef and were only going to eat one type of cuisine for the rest of your life, what would it be?
TA: Probably something Mediterranean, probably Italian. What I love about Italian cuisine is that, at its heart, it's about freshness and simplicity. So is there, like, a really attractive 29-year-old male Italian chef?
JS: Rocco DiSpirito.
TA: Oh, I love Rocco! I'll take him.
JS: Speaking of celebrity chefs, is Rachael Ray taking over the planet, or what?
TA: It's already hers. We're all going to start paying her rent very soon.
JS: Biggest restaurant pet peeve?
TA: I hate when I ask for advice on the menu and they say "Everything's good." And I like a little atmosphere, but I don't like it when it's so dark you can't tell whether you're eating a lamb chop or a gherkin.
JS: Guilty pleasures: Ho Hos, Cheez Whiz?
TA: Lays Sour Cream & Onion potato chips, which at this point owes me an endorsement contract, and by the way, I'm not guilty about it. And Sierra Nevada Pale Ale, which I know is going to get my gay card revoked.
JS: How do you keep your girlish figure?
TA: Significant neuroses, angst, lots of worrying and fear.
JS: One trick to looking knowledgeable about wine?
TA: When you taste a wine you like, you don't have to remember the vintage years or even varietals, although that might be helpful. If you just memorize the names of a few producers you like that are well-known s they're likely to be on a lot of wine lists, yo have a pretty good idea of what you'll enjoy JS: Any champagne tips?
TA: I love champagne and I drink it all th time. I'd say that, in general, as soon as yo spend about $32.50, you're pretty safe.
JS: Has there ever been any backstage hanky panky on the show?
TA: Oh, for God's sake, no! We've becom like icky, irritating brothers. You don want to make out with your brothers.
JS: Do you ever fight?
TA: Oh, sure, all the time, but it's neve that serious. I think we all kind of get eac other and know when to back off.
JS: Is Carson Kressley actually a muppet?
TA: Well, if he were, which one would h be? A cross between Kermit, Miss Piggy an whichever one of Bert and Ernie was gay.
JS: Strangest fan encounter?
TA: The 18-year-old girl who approache me at a book signing in Miami and said tha I needed to marry her. I held up my hand with the ring on it and said, "Sweetie, have you seen the title of the show?" I actually had to call the police about her. She sent some threatening e-mails and it got creepy.
JS: Single biggest change in your life the show has wrought?
TA: None of my Southern Baptist relatives ever ask my mom anymore why I don't have a girlfriend.
JS: Next season is your last. What's next?
TA: We made 100 episodes. We won an Emmy. We had a fantastic time. But all of u have other things we want to do. So the smartass answer is, "Look, we can't wa everyone's back." The thing about Queer Eye is it ate our lives. It takes a week or mor to make an episode. I'll be hosting a wine show on PBS called Uncorked, and I jus recorded a pilot for Food Network. Bu there'll always be a warm spot in my hear for QE. IB

Presenting Our Annual List of Boston's 20 Hottest Bachelors & Bachelorettes

By Jonathan Soroff

THE CALENDAR IS CLOSING IN ON VALENTINE'S DAY. In a culture that's constantly telling you it's imperative to pair off, Feb. 14 can make you feel like a loser if you're still footloose and fancy-free. ♣ What a load of hogwash. ♣ As our annual list of Boston's most eligible bachelors and bachelorettes attests, being single is hardly a handicap or some sort of stigma. On the contrary, the city is full of interesting, accomplished and attractive individuals who currently happen not to be spoken for. And as their impressive résumés and active lives indicate, there's more to life than being someone's significant other. Though our singles are certainly the cream of the crop, they're representative of a whole community of great catches still swimming around out there, and we hope that they'll serve as a source of inspiration for those of you who are feeling like all the good ones are already taken. Some of our bachelors and bachelorettes were brought to our attention by readers, while we became aware of others without any prodding (after all, exceptional people tend to attract attention). But they all have one thing in common: They're the sort of individuals you'd be lucky to sit next to at a dinner party or be happy to fix up with your best friend. ♣ So here's our Valentine to you: 20 of Boston's most eligible bachelors and bachelorettes (including one gay man and one lesbian, as per the ratio in the general population). We hope you enjoy it, and even more, we hope that it serves as a reminder that leading a full and fascinating life doesn't require someone else's riding shotgun. ☛

Eric Feins, 25 [third-year student at Harvard Medical School]

THIS NATIVE of Rochester, N.Y., graduated cum laude from Yale with a bachelor's degree in ethics, politics and economics. Having rowed at Yale, he took a year off to train for the Olympics on the U.S. national team. He never made it to Athens, but he has competed in the Head of the Charles regatta and three world championships (taking home two bronze medals and one silver). As a med student, he's inclined to follow in his father's footsteps and become a surgeon. Despite the 12-hour days and being on call every fourth or fifth night, he still manages to pursue his latest athletic passion, running. He's participated in a 24-hour, 200-mile relay, and last year he ran the Boston Marathon in 2 hours, 40 minutes—a time he hopes to beat this Patriot's Day when he races with Team in Training, to raise money for the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society. His mother's passion for art means he knows his way around a gallery, and on vacations he skips more-exotic locales to visit his family in North Carolina. He's a dog person. He also enjoys cooking, and even with his grueling academic schedule, he finds the time to maintain friendships, gathering socially with fellow students on the third Friday of every month to honor a late classmate. But perhaps the most appealing trait in this driven MD-to-be is his modesty. "I have a younger brother who's training to be a Navy pilot," he says. "That's way cooler than anything I do."

Molly Eckman, 29
[tour consultant]

YOU MIGHT expect someone who coordinates and plans tours for educators and students to be an armchair adventurer, but not Eckman. Her wanderlust and her job have taken her around the globe, including recent trips to Puglia and the Galapagos and an upcoming jaunt to Paris. Many of her personal vacations are focused on wine-producing regions. A member of the French Library and Cultural Center, she attends and occasionally hosts wine tastings. But she's a connoisseur without being precious about it. Raised in Connecticut and Pennsylvania, she studied flute at the prestigious Eastman School of Music and then spent a year abroad in Seville, where she honed her fluent Spanish, before completing her BA (Ph Beta Kappa) at the University of Rochester. She still plays the flute in musical pit orchestras, chamber groups and church ensembles, and her childhood ballet training helped pave the wa for one of her current passions: flamenc dancing. Gregarious, extroverted and outgoing, she loves to write and takes classes whenever her schedule permits, organizes events for the Boston Associa tion of the Phi Beta Kappa Society and loves adventurous cooking—either testing new and exotic recipes or trying to re-create something she ate on a mem rable night dining out. Between jugglin "10,000 different hobbies" and her whirlwind social and professional lives there's never a dull moment.

iliz Soyak, 27 [painter]

AN INTOXICATING BLEND, she was born in Belgium to a Turkish father and a Swedish mother and raised in Tokyo from the age of 6 until 12. After high school in upstate New York, she began studying economics at the University of Vermont but switched to studio art, knowing it was her ue passion. She describes her work as abstract and intuitive and says she never knows beforehand how a inting will turn out. Using mixed media—everything from acrylics and charcoal to wax, collage paper and nd—she usually completes a painting in one sitting, guided by a feeling, a color, textures or the memory of andscape. Whatever she's doing, she must be doing it right, as she paints full-time at her Fort Point studio d has shown at the Chase Gallery on Newbury Street. Having worked as a graphic and Web designer for a w years, she's currently in a master's program in art education so that she can teach it. In addition to prac-ing yoga, she plays tennis, is an avid skier, loves hiking and recently bought herself a kayak. In other words, if the weather's good, she's outdoors. Her family still has a house in Turkey, which she visits as often as she can, and she loves anything to do with the ocean. On nights out, she's apt to see a band or go to an art opening, and she has volunteered her free time to Horizons for the Homeless, painting murals to brighten shelters. A superb cook, she loves to entertain, and although she jokes that talking to her two cats is a sign of incipient crazy-cat-lady-dom, she's got a solid head on her shoulders. Ethereal yet down-to-earth and extremely talented, we have a feeling she'd succeed at anything she set her sights on.

race Jotikabhukkana, 34 [dentist]

WITH A TONGUE-TWISTER of a last name and a first name that suits her perfectly, this infectiously upbeat beauty makes us want to go to the dentist. Born in Califor-a when her parents were in grad school, she was raised in Bangkok nd left Thailand for her last year of high school (in California). She udied bioresource science at Berkeley, and then got her first taste of oston when she earned her DMD at Tufts Dental School in 1999. eturning to San Francisco, she did her advanced education at U.C. an Francisco, where she taught on a volunteer basis for four years as a assistant clinical professor in restorative dentistry. She practiced San Francisco until 2005, but returned here to join two local ivate practices. The transition back to Boston (working six days week) has left her with little free time, but she's chosen to use at time by signing up to do volunteer dentistry for children. e's an occasional ballet- and theater-goer. A devotee of the m, she does yoga and runs, and her golf game's not half bad. Reid DeMont, 36 [research associate at a private investment fund]

AN INTRIGUING cross between a driven professional and a happy-go-lucky ski bum, he was born in Thetford, Vt., and raised in Hanover, N.H. His parents met when his father hired his mother to be a waitress at Mount Snow, so his ski fever developed organically. He took his time to earn a bachelor's degree in civil engineering at UNH. After college, he worked as a civil engineer and then moved to San Francisco to work as a consultant, followed by positions at a dot-com and Credit Suisse First Boston, with stints in between ripping up the slopes in Squaw Valley and surfing in northern California. Surfing is his new obsession, and he chases waves wherever he can find them; in the past year, he's been to Puerto Rico, Mexico, San Francisco and Costa Rica. He moved back to Boston three years ago, working as a consultant until one of his clients offered him a full-time job. In addition to being a whiz at whatever it is he does in investing, he has experience as a carpenter and knows how to operate heavy machinery. He likes to mountain bike, plays golf and recently took up squash, and while he admits to being a mediocre guitar player, he doesn't let it stop him from "making noise" fairly often. Part free-spirited adventurer and part super-competent and practical guy, he's full of surprises and never boring.

[electrical engineer at Linear Technology Corp.]

THIS BRILLIANT Brooklyn boy attended the prestigious Stuyvesant High School (a magnet school for math and science whizzes) and received both his bachelor's and master's degrees in electrical engineering from Cornell. He now works as a design engineer at Linear Technology Corp. in Chelmsford, making analog integrated circuits (those little chips that go into everything from cell phones to PDAs). Handy with anything mechanical, he does all his own automotive work and is proud to say that his car has 200,000 miles on it and is still purring like a kitten. An occasional model, he's appeared in a pharmaceutical ad, some stock photography and an online banner ad, where his smoldering good looks elevate the otherwise prosaic settings. When he moved to Boston, he noticed people rowing on the Charles and has since taken up the sport with a vengeance. His other athletic interests include running the occasional 5- or 10K road race, and the former mountain biker recently took up road biking, completing the MS 150 charity ride from Boston to Provincetown. An all-around athlete, he enjoys playing just about anything without being overly competitive or feeling the need to excel. On a quirkier note, last fall he decided to learn how to weld, figuring that it was a skill that might come in handy someday, repairing cars or making art. He's not too shy to stand up in a karaoke bar (he does a mean Eminem), but he can just as easily discuss politics, current events, philosophy or whatever he heard on NPR that afternoon. If the weather's nice, you'll find him outdoors; otherwise, he's probably hanging out in a coffee shop or club in Central Square. More than just easy on the eyes, he's the total package.

WITH A MELLIFLUOUS voice, penetrating intelligence and searing wit, our lesbian bachelorette is someone we love running into and always walk away from smiling. Born in Atlanta, she was a Navy brat who moved all over, living in the Bay Area, L.A., Seattle, Charleston and Vermont. Wesley Karger, 29

[managing partner at Twin Focus Capital Partners]

A RISING STAR in the local investment-banking firmament, he's a fundamentally decent person with a highly developed taste for fun and a knack for balancing his high-pressure professional life with other pursuits. Born and raised in Lexington, he graduated with honors from BU with a degree in economics and worked at State Street Corp. for three years. In 2003, he joined his twin brother, Paul, at UBS, where they performed so well that they formed the Karger Group within the bank and built it into a miniature powerhouse. Last year they left to form Twin Focus Capital Partners, and after only eight months in business, they have several hundred million dollars under management. As a chartered financial analyst, he's a member of the Boston Security Analyst Society and the CFA Institute. You can often spot him running along the Charles River or working out at the Sports Club/L.A. He's also an avid skier, making frequent trips out west and to Europe as well as tearing it up at Killington, Sunday River and Mount Snow. He and a client share season tickets to the Red Sox. His philanthropic endeavors are legion: He and his brother are corporate sponsors of Mass. Art and donate generously to Dearborn Academy, Boston Medical Center, the Epiphany School and Community Servings, among other causes. A budding contemporary-art collector, his office and home are decorated with museum-worthy pieces. His Back Bay home is also the site of regular dinner parties (two to three per month) that he hosts for friends and clients, and in addition to the paintings he's collected, the place is adorned with a fascinating array of art and objects he's acquired on his far-flung travels for business and pleasure. He's been to Dubai twice in the past year, and as you're reading this, he's wrapping up a whirlwind trip to Hong Kong, Bangkok and Mumbai. Trusted by his clients and cherished by his friends, he's busy building up a thriving business but always takes time to stop and smell the roses.

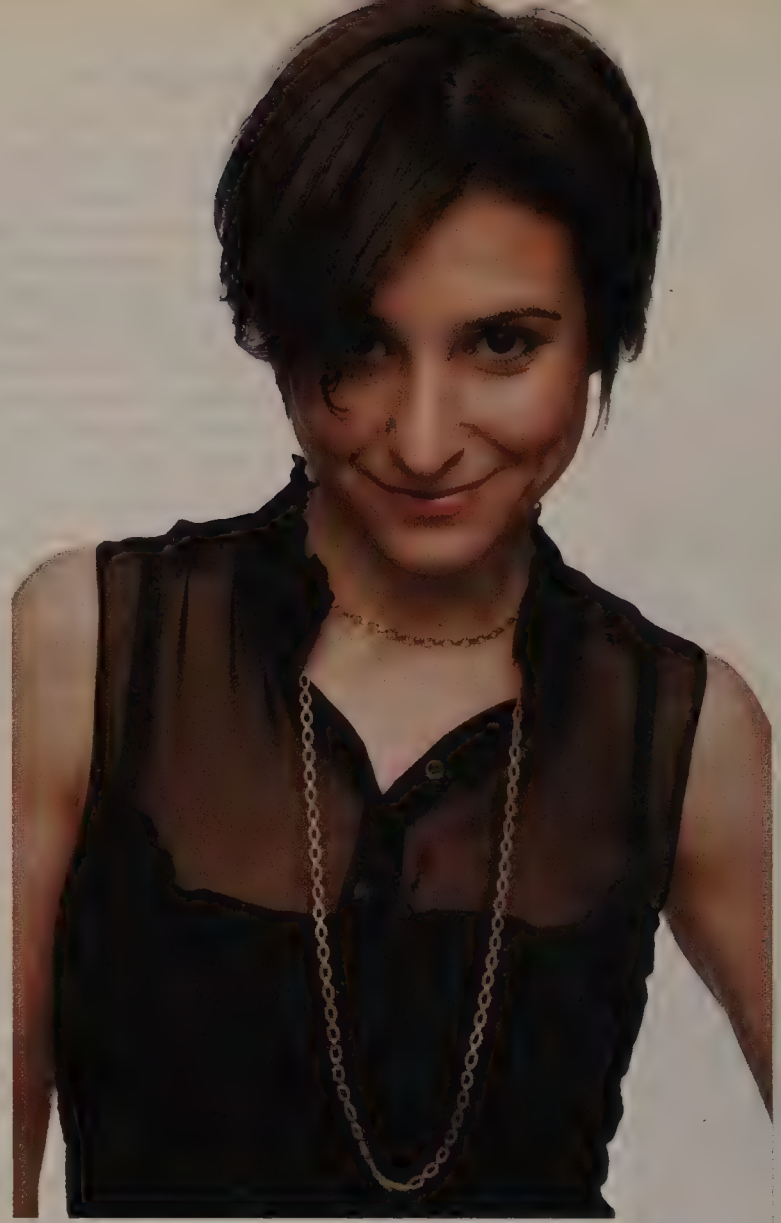
[assistant director of sales for the Seaport Hotel and Seaport World Trade Center]



BORN AND RAISED in the Philippines, this statuesque beauty attended college in Manila and moved to the states 11 years ago, settling in New Orleans (where her family now lives). She spent five years there, followed by a year in New York working at the super-swanky Soho Grand and Tribeca Grand hotels before moving to Boston in 2003. While working at her demanding (and time-consuming) job, she earned her MBA with honors at BU; now that she has more free time, she intends to devote it to her dizzying array of interests: basketball, swimming, belly dancing (which she started doing at the gym and kept up on her own), black-and-white photography and playing the acoustic guitar. One of her favorite places is Home Depot, and her friends are fascinated that she owns a full range of Ryobi power tools, with which she's built furniture. An HGTV addict, she's up for anything and has tried skydiving, mountain climbing, swimming in underwater caves and jumping off a 30-foot waterfall. Because her father tried to warn her off alcohol by telling her that beer was made from horse piss, she prefers vodka, and because he told her that the best way to predict a man's personality was through his driving, she jokes that it's not surprising she's single in Boston. She runs for fitness and charity, completing races for the American Heart Association and the fight against breast cancer and returning to New Orleans every year for the 10K Crescent City Classic (which raises money for various nonprofits). She's organized a fundraiser for Children's Hospital and hopes to get more involved with it and other children's causes, and she's not too shy to admit that one of her goals is to someday be "the coolest mom and hottest wife." We have every confidence she'll succeed.

Melissa Baldino, 31

[assistant producer and executive assistant for America's Test Kitchen]

SHE WORKS for the company that puts out Cook's Illustrated magazine and the TV show America's Test Kitchen, as an assistant producer, executive assistant to the publisher and market research manager. Raised primarily in Europe (her mother is Austrian), she lived in Belgium, France and the U.K. After graduating from the International School of Brussels, she graduated cum laude from BU with a degree in English and psychology. She then worked for advertising agencies in London and San Francisco before moving back to Boston in 2002. Fluent in German and French (which she keeps polished through classes at the French Library and Cultural Center), she's a yoga enthusiast and a student of African dance. A fashion maven, in her spare time she's discovered an avocation in helping people with their wardrobes (it started with her sister and snowballed from there), advising them on what to get rid of, what to keep and what to buy. She's a competitive runner, having completed the San Francisco Marathon, and she cares about children's fitness, too: She and Cook's Illustrated publisher Christopher Kimball started a nonprofit called Parents Against Junk Food, which lobbies for schools to offer healthy food choices. Add to that the fact that she's an excellent cook (which she's modest about because she works with a lot of pros) and has the kind of savoir faire you only get from growing up in Europe, and you've got quite the tantalizing dish.

Jon McKeigue, 34

WHAT'S SEXIER th a chef? The kind of chef who specializes i drool-inducing desserts. Born an raised on the North Shore, he studied food-service managemen at UNH. Living in Vail, he learne how to cook at 11,200 feet, and for 10 seasons he kept the membership happy at Marblehead's super-exclusive Corinthian Yacht Club. He got his start as a pastry chef at Rialto under Jody Adams, and he's been with Bonfire since opened, overseeing desserts at all of Todd English's restaurants in the Boston area. He constructed and operated a greenhouse atop the hotel's roof to grow herbs an vegetables used in the restaurant, and he works as a part-time chocolatier at Stowaway Sweets in Marblehead, where he created their signature candy, the Meltaway. He volunteers at all the big charitable food events in town (the Spinazzola Gala, Chefs in Shorts, Edible Art, etc.), but he has plenty of interests outside of cooking. He's an aspiring guitarist, he practices the Japanese martial art of aikido, and he has a kayak that he paddles around the ocean off Cape Ann. He admires Japanese culture and recently built a koi pond at his house in Salem, where he now has 20 fish to look after. Besides being a world traveler (he recently returned from Australia), he's an avid reader and completely devoted to his family. In short, he's a total sweetheart, and the ideal man for any woman with a sweet tooth.

Carter Gaffney, 29

[first-year student at Harvard Business School]

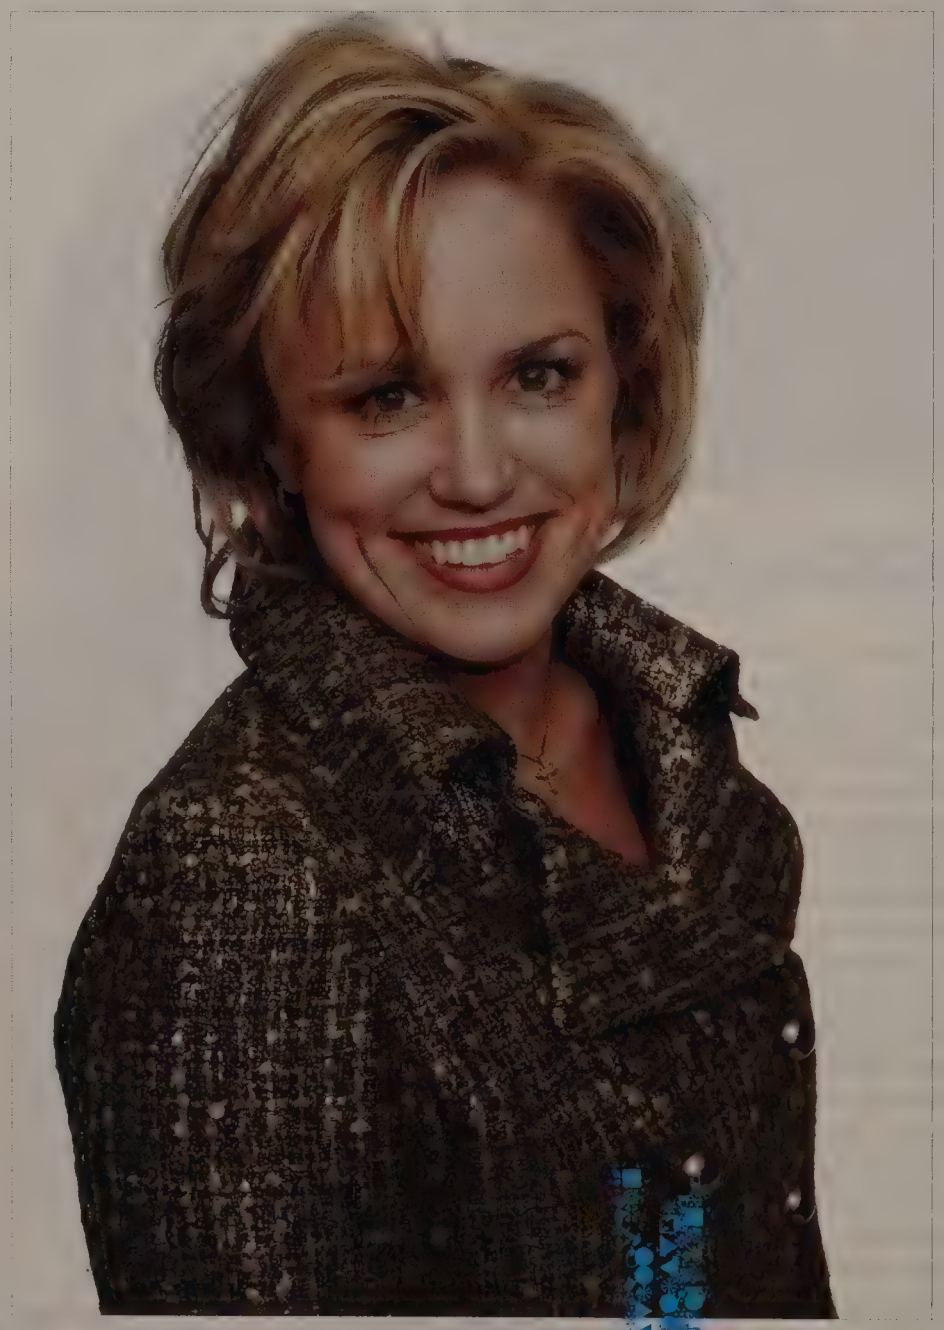
HE'S A HEALTHY mix of James Bond, a California surfer dude and a Wall Street investment banker. After graduating from high school in New Hampshire, he attended the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis, then lived briefly in Newport before moving to San Diego in 1999. As a Navy Seal, he became the quintessential SoCal outdoorsman—surfing, swimming and living the beach-boy life—until moving back to Boston this past fall to attend Harvard Business School. One upside to the move: He's a card-carrying member of Red Sox nation. He plays rugby for the HBS team, but far from being a jarheaded jock, he loves to cook and hosts frequent dinner parties, keeps up with politics and current events by reading the Economist, and runs regularly. He's also an avid skier and snowboarder who has a share in a place at Killington. After receiving his MBA, he hopes to work for a small alternative-energy start-up. Most unexpectedly, he knits to relax—mostly mittens—and if you need further proof that he's a big softy inside an action-hero exterior, he likes writing love letters, making mix CDs and doing all the other romantic things women adore. Brains, brawn and the soul of a poet: It's the contradictions and contrasts that make someone attractive, and he's got them in spades.

Paul Tupa, 28

[owner of the Red Hat Café]

OBVIOUSLY, THEY grow 'em right in North Dakota, as is amply illustrated by this corn-fed cutie who's successful in the restaurant business and a natural athlete. A native of Rolla (a small town near the Canadian border), he attended UMass Amherst, where he studied hotel, restaurant and travel administration and played both football and baseball. He then did a year of graduate work toward an MBA and worked as a manager for Pizzeria Uno before he and his business partner bought a pair of pizza places on the South Shore. They did exceedingly well, and in 2006 the two bought the Red Hat, the legendary hole-in-the-wall that's a remnant of historic Scollay Square (and a place that's been in business for 100 years). Its sustained popularity among Beacon Hill denizens (thanks to good food, a great staff and an artful renovation that respects the past without suffering from terminal kitsch) keeps him busy, but he still plays both football (in a flag league) and baseball. His golf handicap is a 5, impressive for anyone who doesn't spend all day at a country club, and he's an avid angler, going to remote lakes to fish with his father. Vacations tend to be visits to his family (three brothers and their kids), and he volunteers with South Boston's Pop Warner football league. He enjoys knee-boarding and jet-skiing, and he's a devoted fan of the Cubs and the Bears (hey, at least it's not the Yankees and the Colts), but he also enjoys the theater and goes as often as possible. He's a jock with a good head on his shoulders and an appreciation for the finer things in life.

Kari AlSherif, 25



[program development manager for the African Presidential Archives and Research Center at BU; fashion model]

BORN AND RAISED in Portland, Ore., where she attended a Catholic girls' school and began her modeling career, she came to Boston initially to pursue her degree in Africana studies and economics at Wellesley. As an undergrad, she studied abroad at the University of Ghana in Accra and the University of the West Indies in Jamaica; she also spent summers in Hungary with her family (her mother immigrated to the U.S. in the '50s). Upon graduation, she worked for the nonprofit BELL Foundation, an afterschool and summer math and literacy program for grade-school kids, and then moved back to Portland to care for her ailing father, an artist. While there, she sold his art as well as imported African furniture and handicrafts. After his death, she moved to New York and began modeling for Wilhelmina while also working at an investment bank. On a visit to friends in Boston, she booked an informational visit with Charles Stith (whom she had met as a college senior), the former ambassador to Tanzania who runs APARC, and he was so impressed that he offered her the position she's now held since 2005. She currently models for Maggie and spends her spare time pursuing her numerous passions: mentoring younger women, curating and cataloguing her father's work, and doing yoga and running to stay in shape. She'd also like to find a soccer team to join. To top it all off, she's an artist herself (her media are drawing, oil and pastels), and she's also an outstanding cook with a repertoire that includes traditional African recipes, soul food, and mac 'n' cheese that would make a grown man weep. That's what we call impressive.

Donna Morrissey, 38 [director of public relations and corporate affairs for American Red Cross Blood Services, Northeast Division]

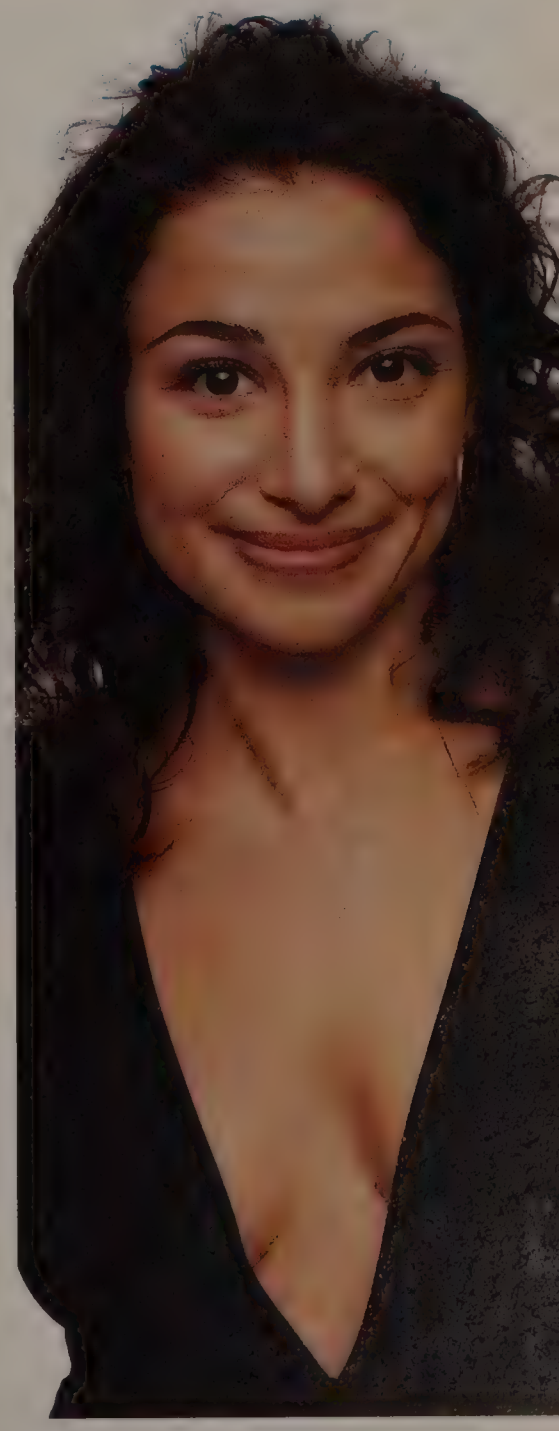
THE DEFINITION of grace under pressure, this consummate professional handled one of the worst career curveballs anyone's ever been thrown with élan and equanimity, and she looked stunning while doing so. Born in Boston and raised in Newton (with summers on Cape Cod), she studied communications and sociology at Boston College and went into broadcast journalism. After working as an assignment editor and producer at WCVB and assignment editor at WBZ-TV, where she also worked with the I-Team investigative unit, she joined PR powerhouse Regan Communications and became a senior vice president, in charge of such clients as Legal Sea Foods, the Boston Harbor Hotel, the Rack and the World Trade Center. Seeking a break from the frenetic pace of agency life, she accepted a position as the cabinet secretary for communications and PR for the Archdiocese of Boston, thinking her role would be to help oversee Boston Catholic TV, the Pilot newspaper and Radio Apostolate, to act as a liaison to the Mass. Catholic Conference, and to otherwise spread the word of the church. But the sexual-abuse scandal broke and she found herself in the midst of a maelstrom, with both the public and media howling for blood. Throughout the crisis, she acted as a spokesperson for the church with poise and sensitivity, trying to serve both the victims and her employer, despite unprecedented public scrutiny. After handling it like the class act she is, she quietly stepped down and went to work for the Red Cross, inspired by an aunt who died of lung cancer and for whom she had acted as primary caregiver. She also just completed a six-year term on the board of the Cooperative Central Bank. A huge Red Sox fan and a season-ticket holder for BC football, she has a condo in Brewster where she spends much of the summer, and she enjoys everything from afternoons at the MFA to walks around Castle Island. Equally comfortable at a black-tie gala or an Irish pub, she wants to get back into sailing and inherited a knack for cooking and entertaining from her mother (her Irish clan is both large and tightly knit). Last year she participated in relief efforts after Hurricane Katrina, and she's now a permanent disaster-relief volunteer. Add to that her sparkling green eyes and a smile that'll knock your socks off, and it's no wonder we think she's aces.

Galia Shokry, 28

[program manager at the University of the Middle East Project

FLUENT IN THREE languages and devoted to cross-cultural understanding, she was born and raised in Tex attended high school in New Jersey and came here to attend BU, where she worked for the Humphrey Fellowship Program and received a degree in international relations, mag cum laude. At the London School of Economics she earned a master's degree in cultural studies, and since returning to Bos she's worked in the restaurant business, as a textbook editor a at her current position at UMEP, which operates academic institutes where foreign high school teachers learn how to fo critical thinking and leadership skills among their students. She's also the director of programming for the nonprofit Youn Women's Task Force. Whether speaking English, Farsi (she's Persian descent), French, Spanish, Italian or Arabic (the last which she's learning), she always has something interesting t say, perhaps because she's seen a fair bit of the world; for two three months of the year, she's someplace in North Africa, the Middle East or Europe. An accomplished violinist, she's learn to rock climb and relies on her bike for transportation around Boston. In quieter moments she reads Harper's or the Economist, and she somehow manages to see three or four mov a week. Her taste in music tends toward the esoteric—Leban pop and Israeli rap are favorites—but anything with a beat w get her dancing. All that, and she's an outstanding cook of inte national cuisine, especially traditional Persian dishes.



Darin Contini, 27

[program manager for industry alignment at the Federal Reserve Bank]

WITH THE CHARM and guilelessness of a Midwestern farm boy and smoldering good looks that betray his Italian heritage, our gay bachelor is simultaneously polished to a high gloss and utterly down-to-earth. Born and raised in Canton, Ohio, he graduated with honors from Ohio Wesleyan with a degree in economics, sociology and anthropology. A college internship at the Boston Fed resulted in a permanent job as a check analyst, and he's risen swiftly through the ranks to his current position, which is to help set banking standards and ensure that the nation's banks operate smoothly. Despite being a transplant, he's an ardent Red Sox fan and goes to games at Fenway whenever he can. A big biker and skier (Tahoe and Jackson Hole being favorite spots), he's also a car nut, having spent his childhood helping his father and brothers restore classic rides; one of his Holy Grails is to own a '55 Porsche Speedster. Actively involved in such charities as the Holiday Happening (a South End toy drive) and the United Way, he's a member of the Federal Reserve Society. Although he loves to cook (especially Italian food), he practically lives at Toro. He speaks passable Spanish, is learning German and loves traveling, of which he does a fair amount for work and extends into vacations wherever the wind blows him (this spring: Italy). An avid reader of anything he can get his hands on, he has catholic taste in music and enjoys everything from the BSO to seeing a garage band at a local dive bar. This man's man will no doubt make some lucky guy blissfully happy, but he's currently footloose, fancy-free and as desirable as they come.

Alison Ross, 28 [second-year student at BU School of Law]

WITH A VOICE AS SEXY as Lauren Bacall's and looks to match her Bogey-hitched heyday, this Newton native attended Concord Academy and then Barnard College at Columbia University, where she earned a degree, cum laude, in English literature and women's studies. Determined to use her Ivy League education to better the world, she worked at a youth-services organization called Shine, served as a paralegal at a boutique antitrust litigation firm in New York, and did strategic planning and board relations for City Harvest, a nonprofit antihunger organization that moves more than 21 million pounds of food per year. Last summer, she interned in New York for then–attorney general (now governor) Eliot Spitzer, and when she finishes law school, she plans to put her degree to use in humanitarian aid, human rights and social justice work. Despite her do-gooder credentials, she knows how to have a good time and has a flawless fashion sense. An avid yoga practitioner and sailor (her family has a boat, and she's actively involved with the Courageous Sailing Center), she plays tennis, runs, loves to go out dancing and knows more about modern art than most museum curators (her family has owned Newbury Street's Judi Rotenberg Gallery for generations). A member of the Institute of Contemporary Art, she's both a compulsive reader who'd gladly spend an afternoon getting lost in a bookstore and a movie buff who makes time to see at least a couple a month. She also volunteers with the Brain Tumor Society (which her late father cofounded) and last year co-spearheaded the law school's effort to get BU to divest from Sudan. In short, she's saving the world and looking stunning while doing it.

lark D'Alfonso, 25 [principal for State Street Global Advisors; rock keyboardist]

FANS OF THE Boston Music Award–nominated blues-rock band Logan, which plays the East Coast from Maine to New York City, know him as the good-looking keyboardist. From 9 to 5, however, he works as a principal for State Street Global Advisors, serving as a technical lead in the fixed-income systems group, hich essentially means that he acts as a liaison among IT developers, business analysts and investment groups. native of New Britain, Conn., he graduated magna cum laude from Northeastern, where he studied manageent information systems and finance, and where he also met the original members of the band (although two wer additions hail from Berklee College of Music). Logan's growing popularity means that much of D'Alnso's free time is spent rehearsing, writing new material and performing (winter weekends are pretty much ooked with gigs at ski resorts throughout New England). But he still manages to find time for pursuits like atching the Sox, playing golf and traveling—everywhere from Martha's Vineyard to Las Vegas to Costa Rica. eing a musician, he also goes to a lot of live shows and can often be found at venues like Harper's Ferry and the radise. Despite his band's mushrooming popularity, though, he maintains a level head and plans to return to hool for his MBA soon... if Logan's next album doesn't go triple-platinum, that is. iB

THE JAZZY JOYS OF JUMBLE

A Perfect Mess: The Hidden Benefits of Disorder* is by Eric Abrahamson and David H. Freedman of Needham.

We're usually led to believe that neat is to good, as messy is to bad. But as this book, covering a surprisingly broad landscape beyond your shocking desk, exuberantly shows: A "sweet disorder" offers burgeoning benefits. Mess, loosely defined (how else?), invites creativity, serendipity, Falstaffian vibrancy of work and often fertile invention. The authors tell tales of benign and productive "mess" in science: the random juxtaposition of two letters on a desk led scientist Leon Heppel to discover a Nobel-winning interconnectedness. Harvey's Hardware in Needham and the New England Mobile Book Fair are two local businesses with their own quirky paradigms of overflowingness and idiosyncratic style. (Harvey's sells an unedited stock of items and makes more money than other, apparently shipshape shops.) The book describes and praises a computer company that has no real agenda or products and projects, but rather responds to whatever comes along and offers fruitful possibilities. Arnold Schwarzenegger, seemingly natty, works "improvisationally" without a set schedule. By contrast, antiseptic neatness and organization deprive people and businesses of cultivating openings into the beautiful unknown—and, the book argues, may paradoxically waste time and cramp relationships.

DRESSING YOUR INNER RED HOT MAMA

The Great Eastern Trading Company (49 River St., Cambridge; 617-354-5279) sells colorful vintage treasures.

Like your most colorfully dressed friend brazenly hailing a taxi, Great Eastern Trading's clothes flut forth onto the sidewalk. These vintage extravaganzas start with sparkly, sexy belly-dancing costumes and jewelry that go shaky-shaky and bras punctuated with sequins and jewels. Surely a non–belly dancer could wear these wowsers to a costume party. Similarly flavored gowns of the tight, flounced, puckered and pouffy variety decorate the walls, adjoining a smattering of lacy wedding dresses and one slim, tea-colored Victorian wedding dress made of intricately wrought lace. There's a smattering of the tulle and crinoline look, feminine and frolicky, clothes the Dresden Dolls' groupies might wear. The designers Lily Rubin and Victor Costa also crop up. Prada is the label on one skirt made of a crinkly pinky-silver silk; it's a classy understatement, very affordable at $75. Even the more "everyday" clothes—well made of good fabrics, like a reversible plaid skirt or a red jacket scribbled with embroidery—are a notch up on the fun scale. Huge reversible racks reveal a world of guys' '70s shirts and, for another contrast, a few nice, dignified Harris Tweed men's jackets, from Brooks Brothers, and some velvet ones. But they're always in proximity to girlie pink wigs, sequined masks and glittering red high heels.

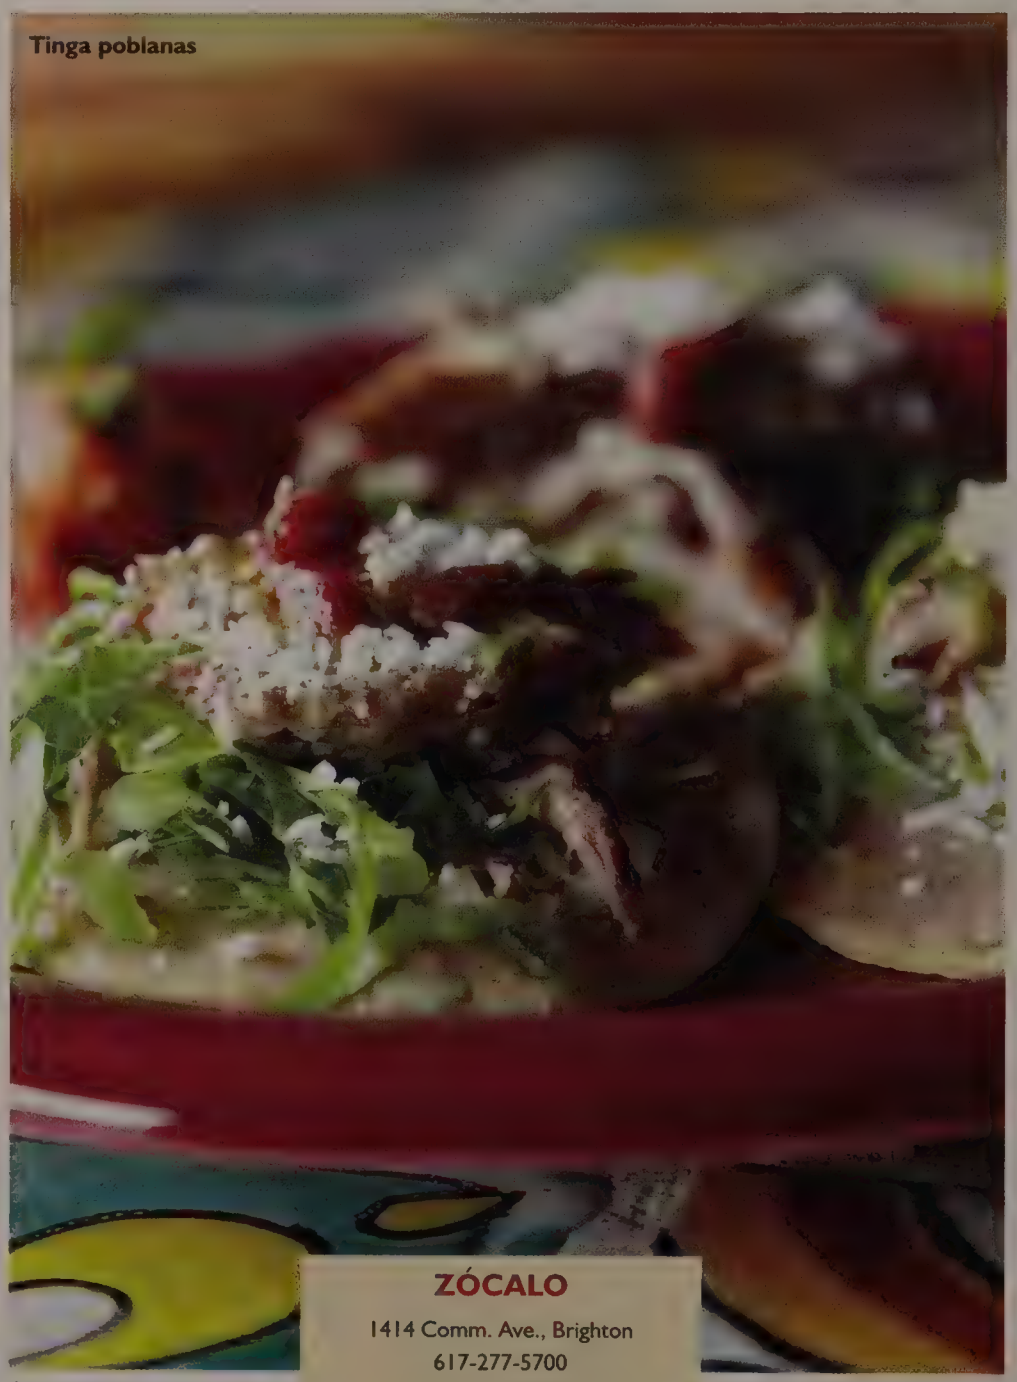
GRAN FIESTA



Brighton's Zócalo offers authentic tastes of Mexico in a lively setting.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

My fondest memory from my time as a student volunteer in Mexico is of my hosts' consummate hospitality. "Mi casa es su casa" is a phrase I heard frequently, and on each occasion the speaker meant it. The warm, friendly ambiance of Zócalo, on Comm. Ave. in Brighton, summoned up those golden memories. Zócalo's co-owner, Ricardo Ramos, is of Philippine heritage, but Mexican hospitality and first-rate Mexican food prevail here. In fact, the hospitality gene must be dominant in the Ramos family: Ricardo's brother Erwin has his own excellent eatery in Inman Square, Olé Mexican Grill. Between Olé, Zócalo and Ricardo's older restaurant in Arlington (also named Zócalo), the Ramos siblings are a force to be reckoned with on the local Mexican food scene.

Zócalo is curiously named, since the word zócalo means a central city square, typically surrounded by buildings that house the seats of religious and civic power: cathedrals, palaces and city halls. In contrast, Brighton's Zócalo restaurant sits in a largely residential area with a scattering of commercial establishments, about midway between Harvard Ave. and the Chestnut Hill Reservoir. After scoring a hard-to-find parking space (the restaurant does offer valet parking for only $6), we found ourselves in an environment that bustled with urban vibrancy—reflected in the bright lights and eye-catching signage of the restaurant's entrance. To the right, a nine-stool bar covered with brightly colored Mexican tiles shares a small room with four tables and a television set. Décor includes a wall of exposed bricks hung with an assortment of Mexican ceramic masks, another wall painted a dark shade of red enhanced with a splash of greenery, and colorful glass panels, hanging plates and other artifacts. The main dining room, to the left of the entrance, seats more than 80 at banquettes and booths, with more exposed brick, plants, an eclectic array of sconces and chandeliers, walls painted salmon pink, and high windows.

Crispy tortilla chips and a light-bodied, mildly flavored salsa held our appetite at bay while we perused the extensive but wieldy three-page menu. Appetizers ranged from the familiar to the exotic. An example of the latter, tostada de nopales ($5.95), contained picante pickled cactus, cooled by a mild salsa verde, chipotle sauce made with smoke-dried peppers, and lettuce and tomato on a small, crisp corn tortilla about 3 inches across.

Tinga poblanas ($5.95) came on a tortilla of the same size, this time covered with flavorful shredded pork that had been braised to a tender, moist texture. Chicken taquitos ($6.50) brought crisp corn tortillas rolled and stuffed with a choice of chicken or poblano peppers with potatoes and queso fresco (a mild farmers' cheese, essentially the Mexican equivalent of ricotta). Elote ($4.95), steamed corn combined with tart lime juice and mellow queso fresco, made a soothing chaser to the heat of the nopales, the only assertively spiced member of t quartet of appetizers, which were a available as an ensemble called bota mexicana ($12.95).

It would be a mistake to visit Zóc without ordering its guacamole en mol jete ($8.50), freshly prepared tablesi The waiter peeled and mashed fresh av cados in a volcanic stone mortar (mol jete) and added a touch of cilantro a salt and a good amount of fresh lir juice, creating a creamy, luscious tre studded with small chunks of fles tomatoes. The waiter brought three four fresh corn tortillas, but I never fi ured out whether they were meant to a company the guacamole or the queso fu dido ($7.50), a marvelous cheese fond enriched with a choice of poblano chil portobello mushrooms or Mexic sausage. We chose the sausage and s vored its distinctive spices (smoked p prika and chile, among others). Final among the appetizers, the tamal ($4.95 a large rectangle of steamed cornme stuffed with chicken and served on a b nana leaf, took top honors. It came wi a choice of mole negro or salsa verd Mole is a Mexican specialty that is mo associated with Puebla, a beautiful col nial city about 75 miles southeast Mexico City, and Oaxaca, another han some city farther south. This dark, ric intensely flavorful sauce, made with chi peppers, spices, ground nuts and choc late, represents one of the crowning gl ries of Mexican cuisine. Zócalo's mole both the dark mole negro and the lig green mole verde, were among the be I've tasted this side of the Rio Grand Popular in Oaxaca and made with nut spices and chiles, mole verde often co tains pumpkin seeds, which may give its haunting, almost addictive flavor.

Moving on to Zócalo's main dishes, was drawn to the chiles rellenos, a varie of which were listed on a supplement the menu. On one evening I chose th chicken chile relleno with mole ($15.95 and on another visit the chile relle puerco ($14.95), with shredded pork an salsa verde studded with pitted gree olives. Both started with a poblano pepp a mild pepper that's green when young an ripens into a deep red. These were stuff h chunks of barbecued chicken or edded pork and mild cheese, then ped in an egg batter and fried, sprinkled h sesame seeds and served with a gar- h of chiles, tomato, onion, cilantro and e, called pico de gallo (literally oster's beak," a reference to the red or and beak-like shape of the chile pep- s that compose it). Both rellenos were believably delicious.

Other main courses included cochinita il ($12.95), pork braised with toma- es, orange, onions, chiles and chipotle ice. The pleasant bitterness of the or- ge gave the dish a satisfying, lingering mplexity. Huachinango à la Ver- uzana ($15.95), a specialty from Mex- o's famous port town, boasted firm- shed red snapper topped with a sauce of sins, capers, green olives and pickled apeños, pleasing in both texture and te. Finally, camarones al mojo de ajo 15.95) yielded eight or nine large rimp sautéed in olive oil carefully to eserve their perfect, firm texture and sh lively flavor. We requested the de- table, mild chipotle sauce to be served the side to avoid what we've encoun- ed too often in other Mexican restau- rants: the deterioration of the texture and distinctive flavor of ingredients, particularly fish, by being stewed in a sauce. It worked, and we were rewarded with a memorable dish.

Desserts at Zócalo ($6) came from the standard repertoire. Vanilla flan, a thick, creamy custard, and chocolate soufflé with a tangy apricot sauce (replaced since my visits by chocolate bread pudding with raspberry or mango sauce) served as fitting punctuation marks at the end of a splendid meal. While Zócalo has a modest wine list, my curiosity was piqued by a sampler of sangrías ($10.50 for three glasses). The three we chose—peach, pear and mango—brought two winners and one disappointment. The mango and the peach, made with red and rosé respectively, delivered refreshing combinations of wine, fruit juice and spices, while the pear was disappointingly thin and lifeless.

Zócalo's engaging food and "mi casa es su casa" ambiance reminded me of why I continue writing these reviews after 10 years with the IMPROPER. The capacity of the talented food professionals in Boston never ceases to delight me. IB

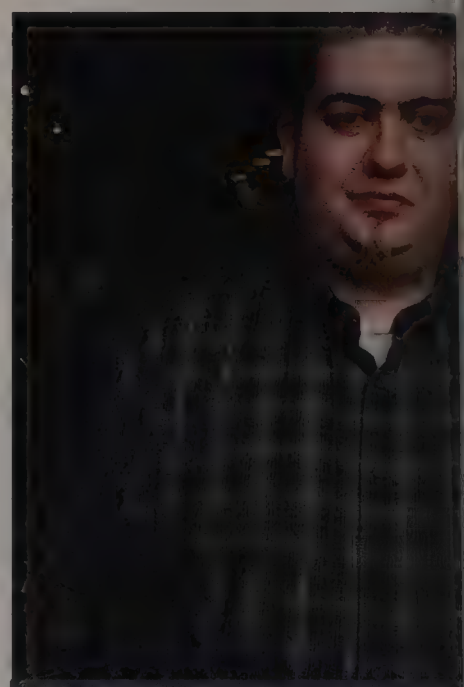
New Spark at the Fireplace



Toby Hill Lights the Grill.

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

By the time you read this, the wood-burning grill at the Fireplace will be turning out the likes of New England cassoulet, baked scallop-scampi macaroni and cheese with roasted garlic, and other crock-baked dishes with a little less rusticity and a little more "haute." That's because recently hired chef Toby T. Hill, who also owns the Eldredge Room in Chatham, shares Fireplace owner Jim Solomon's "philosophy" (Hill's term), but likes to add a bit more refinement.

"I'll keep the price point right where it is," he adds quickly. "I'm not adding cost; I'm adding creativity." But what brings Hill, who's established a fine reputation on the Cape with both the Eldredge Room and a stint at the Chatham Bars Inn, to a neighborhood eatery in Brookline?

"It's hard to make a living on the Cape with two or three months of business," he says. "I'll run the Eldredge Room from May to October, lessening my hours here while Jim takes on a more prominent position." While he's at the Fireplace, Hill plans to make his own ice cream and serve it atop "apple cheddar pie with caramelized milk… so simple and so, so good." He'll also steer clear of such high-priced luxury ingredients as caviar, truffles and foie gras, having learned from his New Year's Eve experience at the Fireplace that its clientele prefers more down-to-earth fare. "Comfort food is more comfortable to eat," he says.

Chef Toby T. Hill has taken over the kitchen at the Fireplace in Brookline.

New England Returns to the Super Bowl…

… in the person of Paul O'Connell, chef/owner of Chez Henri in Cambridge. Unlike our beloved local football team, O'Connell (who may not be quite as widely beloved but is certainly likeable) has been invited to the Super Bowl—or, more specifically, to the pre–Super Bowl extravaganza known as Taste of the NFL. On Saturday night, Feb. 3, O'Connell will compete alongside top chefs from each of the NFL team cities in a cook-off of regional recipes, with all proceeds to benefit anti-hunger groups.

O'Connell is no rookie; this is his fourth consecutive appearance at the event. "Bob Sargent (chef/co-owner of Flora in Arlington) told me, 'Wow, it's like a government job, man,'" says O'Connell. What makes O'Connell such a desirable guest? "It's 'cause I'm dedicated to the cause, t party with a purpose—or porpoise, 'cau it's in Miami," he laughs.

A Round Peg in a Square Hole?

Z-Square in Harvard Square has on been open for a few months, but appa ently not everyone was speaking the sa language when it came to running t restaurant: Opening chef Paul Sussma (formerly of the Fireplace and the la Daddy-O's in Inman Square) has d parted on terms that are said to be less th amicable. He's been replaced by ch Scott Robertson.

Bogardus Walks… and Talks Vox

Chef Eric Bogardus is no longer whippi up his fantastic brandade in the Back B kitchen of Vox Populi. After heading Europe for some "food traveling" in Fran and a beer and food tour of Germany with brewmaster buddy, Bogardus plans to co back to Boston, where he might open h own place. But it sure sounds like there'll no return to Vox: "I did as well as I cou with bringing Vox back to a respectable di ing level," he says. IB

Performing Arts: This Little Piggy

February ushers in the year of the pig on the Chinese lunar calendar, and the Opera House kicks it off with a Chinese New Year Spectacular produced by New Tang Dynasty Television. Traveling to 29 cities worldwide, the show features traditional dragon and lion dances, drumming and music from the "golden age" of the Tang Dynasty. Colorful sets, vibrant costumes and leagues of performers make it the flashiest of the Chinese New Year events on Boston's social calendar this year. Afterward, it's a no-brainer to toddle over to Chinatown for some tea and moo-shu. Opera House, 539 Washington St., Boston (617-259-3400). www.ntdtv.com. 2 and 7:30 pm. $35-$85. —LPK

CityScope: A Valentine Fed-Ex

Say what you will about Kevin Federline, but in terms of sheer fame, have you ever seen any one (excluding Weird Al, perhaps) accomplish more with less? On Feb. 9, the man, the myt the K-Fed brings his heartache and chutzpah to Boston to host Gypsy Bar's Anti–Valentine' Day celebration. Federline—one of 2006's highest-profile exes—is scheduled to arrive at the bar at about 11 pm and set up shop in the "Shred Your Ex" VIP Room—where he'll be drink ing, mingling and posing for photos until 1 am. You can join him there if you bring a photo that guy or gal who stomped on your heart and feed it to one of the VIP Ex paper shredders. Oh, and leave those ear plugs at home; we hear that Federline won't be taking the stage. Gypsy Bar, 116 Boylston St., Boston (617-482-7799). www.gypsybarboston.com. 8 pm. $15, general admission to bar; free access to VIP room with shreddable photo. —RL

MON.–SUN./FEB. 12–18

Performing Arts: Puppet Regime

While the Muppets teach the toddler set their ABCs and 123s, the Bread and Puppet Theater group targets a largely adult audience, staging puppet shows that carry a radical political message. Founded in New York during the Vietnam era, the group's giant papier-mâché puppets were a fixture on the '60s protest scene. Now based in Vermont, the troupe comes to Boston this month for a week of politically focused performances and art shows. The evening program, "The Battle of the Terrorists and the Horrorists," explores current geopolitical events, while the family-friendly matinee, "Everything Is Fine Circus," stars Pinky, the Federal Emergency Elephant. The week also features 25 local puppeteers and a 15-piece brass band. Come hungry: Carrying the message that art is as fundamental as bread, sourdough rye is served at each show. Boston Center for the Arts, 539 Tremont St., Boston (617-933-8600). www.breadandpuppet.org. Check Web site for performance schedule. $10-$12; $5-$10, students and seniors; free admission to art exhibition. —LPK

FRI.–SUN./FEB. 9–11

Tastings: The Grapest Month

It's a short month, but one of the most punishing when it comes to weather. The best way to deal is to ramp up your alcohol intake, and several February wine fests offer the chance to booze it up with class. On Feb. 9, the Seaport World Trade Center plays host to the Anthony Spinazzola Foundation Gala of Food and Wine. Now in its 22nd year, the black-tie affair features offerings from more than 130 Boston-area restaurants and 90 international wineries, and proceeds support the foundation's fight against hunger and homelessness. The following two days (Feb. 10 and 11), the WTC is home to yet another annual event. It's the 16th Boston Wine Expo, which showcases selections from more than 440 international and domestic wineries and boasts special features like a Grand Cru wine lounge, seminars and celebrity chef demonstrations. And let's not forget about the Boston Harbor Hotel's Wine Festival, which kicked off last month and is packed with 17 different wine-themed events throughout February. We'll drink to that. Seaport World Trade Center, 200 Seaport Blvd., Boston. Spinazzola (781-344-4413; www.spinazzola.org): Feb. 9, 7:30 pm. $200. Boston Wine Expo (877-946-3976; www.wineexpoboston.com): Feb. 10 and 11, 1-5 pm. $85-$120. —RL

FRI./FEB. 9

Movies: Dripping With Non-Irony

Sure, we like our tunes meta-reflective and ironic just as much as th next cynically self-aware music scenester. Sentimental torch songs? Way too Celine Dion. But once upon a time—back when every ros had its thorn—a rocker could bring a stadium to tears with unapolo getically earnest entreaties about laying you down on a bed of roses and making love out of, well, nothing at all. Paying tribute to those long-gone days, Coolidge Corner Theatre hosts a midnight singalong of '80s power ballads from Journey, Bon Jovi, Tesla and more with the best of the worst music videos from the decade. Expect fog machines and can dles, and prepare bang heads with a the rest of the pos metalheads. Coolidge Corner Theatre, 290 Harvard St., Brookline (617 734-2500). www. coolidge.org. 12 am $9.50. —LPK

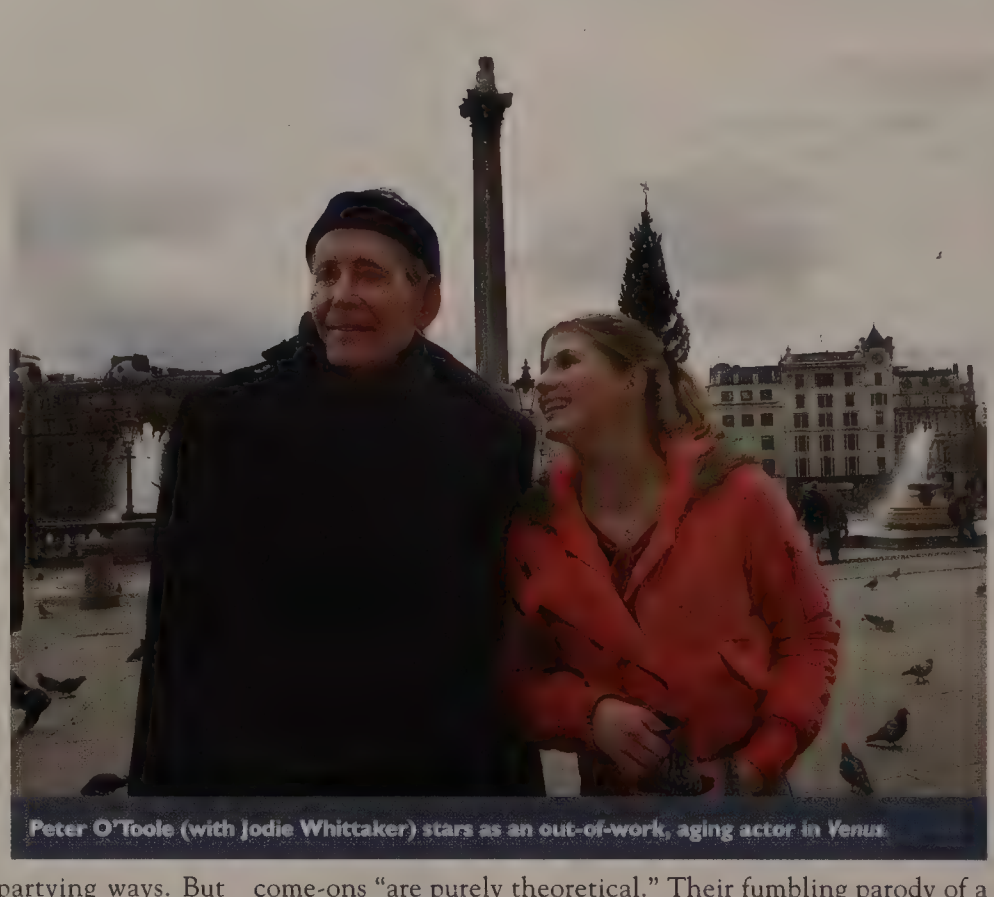
MOVIES



Cool Hand O'Toole

The aging legendary actor shines as an aging legendary actor in Venus.

BY SEAN BURNS

We don't like to think about our movie stars growing old. Indeed, a large part of celluloid's magic lies in the way it preserves them in their prime, passing down from generation to generation visions of unflappable radiance and glamour. The increasingly youth-driven Hollywood marketplace shows little interest in folks who are moving along in years, so the majority of our elder icons often have no choice but to get off the stage while everybody's still clapping.

Of course, there are exceptions. But even in such cases, movies tend to infantalize the elderly, restricting them to roles like those sweet little old ladies who offer all sorts of life lessons before quietly dying off-screen. The best that most aging actors can hope for is a plum potty-mouthed-grandpa part.

Peter O'Toole (with Jodie Whittaker) stars as an out-of-work, aging actor in Venus.

Luckily for us, Peter O'Toole isn't about to go out like that. The stubborn, foppish legend of both stage and screen is 74, and he looks at least a decade older than that—thanks, no doubt, to his notorious hard-partying ways. But O'Toole has found his ideal swan song in Venus, Roger Michell's mule-headed, big-hearted and filthy-minded examination of one fussy lion who isn't quite ready for winter.

O'Toole stars as Maurice, a once-famous stage actor now reduced to playing corpses on British soap operas for pocket change. Every morning Maurice meets with fellow faded thespians Ian (Leslie Phillips) and Donald (Richard Griffiths) to swap pills, trade quips and pore over the obituaries, paying particular attention to how many column inches their former costars merited.

Ian has just hired a distant, 20-something grandniece to give him a hand around the house, and he's besotted by grandiose visions of teaching the country lass all about literature and classical music. Her arrival, to put it mildly, comes as a disappointment. Jessie (Jodie Whittaker) is a magnificently vulgar little creature, chomping noisily on her gum while plopped in front of the television for hours on end—and that's just the early part of the day, before she starts drinking. Ian is appalled. Maurice, on the other hand, couldn't be more smitten.

Jessie's foul mouth, protruding beer belly and lack of manners are catnip for the old codger. There's suddenly a lascivious light in O'Toole's eyes, and Venus becomes a strange and unique journey indeed, thanks to the ruggedly unsentimental, clear-eyed way it allows Maurice's raging lechery to be funny, icky and quite sad, often all at the same time.

Michell previously collaborated with screenwriter Hanif Kureishi on The Mother, a deeply disturbing 2003 drama that's become somewhat notorious, thanks to graphic scenes in which a pre-007 Daniel Craig violently ruts away with a matronly senior citizen. In other words, these two gentlemen aren't about to shy away from the nasty details, and a few of O'Toole's more colloquial word choices elicited gasps at my Sunday-afternoon matinee.

Alas, Maurice has had more than his share of prostate problems of late, so he's able to assure young Jessie that his predatory come-ons "are purely theoretical." Their fumbling parody of a courtship is fascinating because of all the pat resolutions and expected homilies that Michell and Kurieshi so studiously avoid. Jessie remains boorishly inarticulate and destructive; the slight glimmers of wisdom don't appear in her eyes until it's far too late to fix what she's broken. Maurice, similarly, finds himself surveying the wreckage he's left behind with an only moderately renewed perspective, hesitantly teetering toward something like self-awareness during a couple of marvelous encounters with his ex-wife, brilliantly played by Vanessa Redgrave. The insinuating give-and-take between these two veteran performers is alone worth the price of admission.

Feeling at times like a rebuttal to the polished cutesiness of those Grumpy Old Men movies, Venus has very few romantic notions about growing old. The movie is packed with prostate exams, catheters and toenail clippings, always forcefully upfront about the fact that the aging process often consists of one damned indignity after another. O'Toole is unflatteringly photographed, the lighting emphasizing his frailty while his labored breathing is left to linger on the soundtrack.

Yet Venus somehow takes this all in stride, keeping a jaunty, matter-of-fact tone for the bulk of its running time. The indomitable rakishness of its star can make just about anything amusing, so even in the film's darkest patches you're never less than acutely aware of just how much fun O'Toole must be having, being such a pickled old ham. An early sight gag finds the actor springing from a television studio deathbed, firing up a smoke and happily, loudly cursing. It's a blissful little moment that somehow encapsulates this curiously affecting film: lewd misbehavior as a life force. iB

grily politicized piece of speculative science ficti

had. Cuarón and his brilliant cinematographer, Emmanuel Lubezki, have rewritten the rules of the action film, shooting exclusively with available light and in a succession of long, miraculously unbroken camera movements, thus lending a nerve-wracking real-time anxiety to the proceedings. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Curse of the Golden Flower ★★½
A visual orgy of blinding colors and ludicrously ornate costumes, Zhang Yimou's latest finds the filmmaker retreating further into lavish, empty spectacle. This campy, overwrought goof teeters between grand opera and soap opera, as aging action heartthrob Chow Yun-Fat plays against type as a dastardly emperor, secretly poisoning his second wife (the ravishing Gong Li) after discovering she's had a torrid affair with her stepson. Just don't ask what happened to the first Mrs. Emperor, as such queries seem to inspire a slithering horde of scythe-wielding ninjas to plummet suddenly from the rooftops. Stuffed silly with betrayals, incestuous alliances and enough lovingly photographed slow-motion hair-flips for a year's worth of shampoo ads, Curse of the Golden Flower offers a few giggly, melodramatic kicks. Such vast CGI armies overtake the palace's annual Chrysanthemum Festival that the sheer scale of the thing becomes something of a joke. There's not much emotional attachment, save for Zhang's gentle nod toward all the working stiffs who get stuck sweeping up the bodies and repotting flowers. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Dreamgirls ★★½
All razzle-dazzle and very little soul, writer-director Bill Condon's breathlessly anticipated (and even more breathlessly paced) adaptation of the beloved Broadway musical frantically flings itself from one show-stopping number into another, never settling down long enough for us to become emotionally invested. A muckraking alternate history of Motown, Dreamgirls stars Beyoncé Knowles as a Diana Ross–ish diva bumped to the forefront of a Supremes-esque group by one Machiavellian Berry Gordy clone (Jamie Foxx, surprisingly inert here). Former American Idol contestant Jennifer Hudson belts out the show's signature song, "And I'm Telling You I'm Not Going," with an earth-shattering set of pipes, but her performance seems to shut down and go blank whenever she's not called upon to sing. The largely novice cast lacks the force of personality required to breathe life into these stock figures, save for an electrifying Eddie Murphy, who dominates every moment he's onscreen as a self-destructive James Brown/Marvin Gaye composite. Condon rushes headlong through the decades with such a bare minimum of characterization, this crowd-pleaser feels curiously empty. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

The Good Shepherd ★★
Robert De Niro imparts roughly the same level of energy to his second directorial effort that he's brought to most of his movie roles in recent years. That's a gentle way of saying that the darn thing just lies there on the screen. Matt Damon works some subtle wonders as Edward Wilson, a fictional composite standing in for paranoid WASP America during the founding of the CIA. Segueing from Yale's secret Skull & Bones society to the Bay of Pigs invasion while surrounded by a lot of the same well-funded pals, Wilson's an emotional dead fish. The Good Shepherd wants to track the implosion of his spirit in service to God and country, but the character was already so closed off and sealed up to begin with, there's not a lot to be lost over the course of these three ponderous, bone-dry hours. A miscast Angelina Jolie gets stuck in the thankless wife role, while cameos from De Niro's New York pals Alec Baldwin and Joe Pesci only momentarily liven up the stuffy proceedings. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

The Hitcher ★
I doubt anybody was asking for this remake of a 1986 late-night cable staple, a movie renowned more for its creepy, sadomasochistic homoeroticism and wildly out-of-proportion brutality than for any intrinsic storytelling value. (Everyone who had HBO during their formative years probably still remembers the finger-in-the-french-fries scene, or the sight of Jennifer Jason Leigh being quartered by a tractor trailer.) But sure enough, demon-spawn producer Michael Bay's horror retread factory has attempted to update this sick tale, mainly by jettisoning the curious subtext and adding a dopey macho edge to all the gruesome bloodletting. Vapid starlets Zachary Knighton and Sofia Bush make the fatal mistake of picking up Sean Bean's creepy hitchhiker one dark and stormy night. Splitting the original's lone protagonist up into a cute, bickering couple fatally undercuts the tale's isolated sense of dread, and first-time director Dave Myers can't turn down the crummy rage-rock soundtrack long enough to cultivate anything resembling tension. Adding insult to injury, no french fries. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Letters From Iwo Jima ★★★★
Originally intended as a bookend to last October's flawed-but-worthy Flags of Our Fathers, Letters From Iwo Jima emerges as something far stronger, more unprecedented—perhaps even revolutionary. Only an American icon like Clint Eastwood could get away with making a WWII battle epic told from the losing side's point of view. (In Japanese with English subtitles, no less!) The filmmaking is spare and elegant. Tom Stern's washed-out cinematography drains the color from the frame, save for sharp stabs of crimson blood. The soundtrack offers a mournful piano dirge wherever lesser directors would opt for full orchestral bombast. But what'll stay with you for days afterward are those long, unbearable passages of time cramped in dark, frightening tunnels, racked by the distant thunder of explosions, as these frightened young men are left with nothing to contemplate but their own impending demise. Eastwood never once questions the necessity of this war; he seeks only to illuminate its cost, which in the hands of such a sensitive filmmaker becomes almost too horrible to bear. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Miss Potter ★★½
Babe director Chris Noonan embroiders the life of writer Beatrix Potter into a harmless little doily of a movie. Twee enough to trigger the gag reflexes of more-jaded viewers, it's also so good-natured and well acted that audiences less prone to sugar shock will eventually find themselves won over. Renée Zellweger trots out her Bridget Jones accent and works all sorts of variations on "adorable" as the slightly dotty, proudly unmarried author, glimpsed penning the adventures of Peter Rabbit and Jemima Puddle-duck while her cheery cartoon watercolors spring to animated life, keeping this lonely lady company all along the warmly photographed English countryside. Ewan McGregor sports a riotously unconvincing push-broom moustache as Potter's boyish publisher, but as their covert courtship proceeds, the two performers conjure a beguilingly innocent chemistry that's downright disarming. They get some strong support from Emily Watson's lumbering, manly sidekick, coded here as a lesbian in a bluntly evasive fashion. It's all perhaps a bit too pie-eyed and cutesy for its own good, but not unpleasant. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Notes on a Scandal ★★★½
This deliciously catty cup of arsenic-laced tea gives Dame Judi Dench her meatiest role in ages, starring as an acerbic, secretly needy schoolmarm spinster with a crush on Cate Blanchett's willowy, in-over-her-head art teacher. Adapted by acid-tongued playwright Patrick Marber from a novel by Zoe Heller, Notes on a Scandal is a viciously hilarious

British piss-take on our own Mary Kay Letour saga. After Dench spies Blanchett rolling ar the art-studio floor with a 15-year-old soccer h gan, the cutthroat wench tries spinning the s tion to her benefit in this twisted tale of emot blackmail. The story is told through Dench's tentionally revealing diary entries, read in a p perfect voice-over by the actress while the Ph Glass score provides an ironically comic cou point. Director Richard Eyre (who worked Dench in Iris) maintains a brisk pace with a mum of fuss. Blanchett has never been so achi vulnerable, and Dame Judi is simply a talons-delight. Very naughty, but a lot of fun. (At Bo
Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square
West Newton.)

The Pursuit of Happyness ★★★
Italian director Gabriele Muccino's first English-l guage film is a tough-minded piece of work abo

Out of the Bag

The Cat Empire expands its groove from Australia to Cuba to Boston.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

"Maybe she'd say, 'We are crazy,' the two of us together like Melbourne weather," Felix Riebl sings in "Lullaby," from the Cat Empire's U.S. debut, Two Shoes. But he couldn't have anticipated the holiday anomaly he witnessed this past December. In the midst of the Australian summer, his home city experienced its first white Christmas in 108 years. Only three days earlier, the temperature had been 100 degrees.

"Yeah, the weather's going all over the place," says the Cat Empire front man. The same could be said of his Aussie sextet's music, which blends Latin, jazz, soul, funk, ska and hip-hop into a wholly eclectic cocktail.

The Cat Empire's distinctive sound derives from an eclectic mix of Latin, jazz, ska and more.

"It's hot comes from Melbourne: The weather and the music are both a bit insane," says Riebl. "The jazz scene here in the [band's] early days, there was so much going on. There was a lot of attitude and also a lot of freedom. It was a great group of musicians and a great scene happening down here. I think when we were kids, 18 or 19, that rubbed off on us."

Now 25, the singer-percussionist recalls how he and his future bandmates hung out at hot spots like the Z Bar, an all-night jazz club where underage musicians could sneak in. "You'd knock on the window maybe at 11 or 12 that night and you'd be there 'til 8 ... the next morning," Riebl says. "It was one of those venues where all the musicians from Melbourne would come. That's how I learned to play."

The Cat Empire began in 1999 as a jazz trio with Riebl on timbales, Oliver McGill on Rhodes electric piano and Ryan Monro on acoustic bass. Enlisting singer-trumpeter Harry Angus and drummer Will Hull-Brown, the group broadened its groove-savvy palette, and they secured a hip-hop element with the addition of turntablist Jamshid "Jumps" Khadiwala.

"It's something to make people feel lively and feel enjoyment and feel surprise," Riebl says of their music, which is cracking American airwaves thanks to the slinky, horn-spliced punch of "Sly," a local staple on WBOS.

Named after a labeled drawing by Riebl's 8-year-old brother, the Cat Empire initially found its footing during a carnival-style residency at the Spiegeltent, a cabaret pavilion that set up shop first in Melbourne, then Adelaide.

"We played for seven nights, and it went so well we went to Adelaide and played for seven nights there, and every night there'd be more people," says Riebl, whose ensemble pulls into the Paradise Feb. 11. "The first night, there'd be maybe 30 people in the room, and by the end, there'd be nearly 500. Getting that sort of following in the early days was an essential part of the band's existence.

"Because we were playing in the tents with huge numbers of people coming to see us, we could do our own big concerts in theaters, and we had all of these performers coming in as guests," he says. "We had contortionists and sword swallowers and people like that come and perform with us at normal rock venues. So we got a bit of a cult following."

The sideshow trappings have fallen by the wayside, but the Cat Empire retains the same spirit of those early exhibitions. "We were doing something to make people feel alive and have an experience away from the 9-to-5, to get into a space where anything could happen," Riebl says from his home in Melbourne. "Overseas, we can't do residencies. But we can perform and have faith in the word of mouth."

The Cat Empire's multiplatinum success in Australia also gave the group leverage to record Two Shoes just about anywhere. The band chose to work with producer Jerry Boys in the Havana studio where he engineered CDs for the Buena Vista Social Club and Ruben Gonzalez, a pianist idolized by Riebl and McGill since their mid-teens. "We used to listen to people like Ruben Gonzalez, and when my parents would go to the country, we'd play timbales and piano to get that percussive effect," Riebl says. "The Cubans have such a beautiful combination of rhythmic and melodic qualities.

"To move all our stuff to Cuba, to get it through customs, to move it into the studio, it was enormous," the singer says. "Imagine the idea of going to a place where you force yourself to work in third-world conditions. I mean, it's an old shoe factory, just a wooden room with a booth. There's not much else to it. The studio breaks down sometimes and all the rest of it. There were no headphones. There was no separation. You just perform in a room together."

And that's just the type of environment the Cat Empire needs to thrive. iB plays Feb. 11 at the Paradise Rock Club.

The Cat Empire

WHAT MAKES A GREAT BARTENDER?

Is it sheer Cocktail-esque flair with the bottles, an encyclopedic knowledge of potent potions, a simple willingness to go through the credit-card routine for someone with a two-drink tab? We want to know. Pick up a pen and tell us who makes the mixes, pours the pints and sets up the shots that shake and stir your unflagging adoration. Show your appreciation by voting to immortalize your favorite [illegible] in our next Beloved Bartenders issue.

FEBRUARY 7 – 20, 2007

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

It's time to retire the golden oldies and start humming another tune. If ever you were primed to take on a new persona or assume a different role, now would be the time. Not only is your erratic Uranus ruler being energized by sexy Mars, Uranus is also wrapped up in the arms of loving Venus. However, the transformation goes way beyond the physical. Thanks to the annual merger of the creative sun and visionary Neptune in Aquarius, your view of the future and the part you were intending to play in it may also change.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Since it can mess with your plans big time, try to keep track of Mercury's meanderings over the next two months. The Messenger crosses from Aquarius to Pisces on Groundhog Day, turns retrograde the night of Feb. 13 at 10 Pisces, backs into Aquarius on Feb. 26, goes direct on March 8, reenters Pisces on March 18 (the day of the Pisces new moon/partial solar eclipse) and returns to 10 Pisces 10 days later. The little guy doesn't leave your sign until the egg salad concocted from the Easter egg hunt is gone on April 10.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

It's the time of year when most planets are congregating at the top of your solar chart, where your intelligence, ambition and social awareness thrive. This leaves only a Saturnian sense of emptiness in your Leo house of romance and risk. Not a very promising prognosis for a happy Valentine's Day, but if you've acquired a measure of maturity since last year, you'll be grateful that you're not on another emotional roller coaster ride. Safe and steady don't make the heart beat faster. Plus, it's good to know that some relationships have legs.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

You could be in a fairly precarious position while your Venus ruler comes under the influence of rebellious Uranus. Besides throwing caution to the wind, what—or more to the point, whom—are you likely to give up? Just be aware that a few days before Mercury turns retrograde on Feb. 13, Venus comes very close to accepting a dare from boastful, go-for-broke Jupiter. Once you're on the road to wretched excess, it'll be hard to turn back. Then, before you know it, you're stuck with a lavish Valentine's Day celebration.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

Another heads-up for Twins who take their Mercury ruler's comings and goings seriously: Since the Messenger's retrogression begins on Feb. 13, be sure to schedule mechanical and electrical repairs ASAP. Also, initiate contact with the people you'll be dealing with during the rest of February and the first half of March. Order communication devices, and if you'll be traveling during this period, confirm all reservations. Don't wait until the last minute to decide how you'll spend Valentine's Day. Forewarned plus forearmed equals not disappointed.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

The most interesting astrological event this week is the annual marriage of loving Venus and unpredictable Uranus in idealistic Pisces, a fellow water sign that means you no harm. With nothing to fear but fear itself, you might just feel confident enough to solidify your plans for an unusual, albeit romantic Valentine's Day celebration. Who cares whether argumentative Mars in your Capricorn partnership house is acting up? Or that Mercury, by turning retrograde, can mess with your voice mail—not to mention what it may do to your wheels?

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

While your sun ruler transits your Aquarius house of allies and antagonists, Lions may feel a compulsion to pay more attention to the face across the table, the voice on the other end of the phone. Practically speaking, this shift in perspective can work to your advantage, especially while the sun radiates more light on productive Saturn in your sign. Another shining example of patience being the key to heaven couldn't hurt, nor would learning something about yourself you weren't aware of. Quiz an authority on the subject.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

It doesn't have to be major; however, what does occur during the days preceding your Mercury ruler's change of direction on Feb. 13 can have a significant impact for weeks to come. Until then, follow your usual pre-retrograde drill (make repairs, order stuff, verify bank balances, etc.). How and why you're involved with Pisces people might become the main point of Mercury's trip through the sign of the Fish, a transit that doesn't end until Easter is over. An Aquarius coworker could also play a prominent role in this scenario.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

One of the advantages of being born a Libra is having divinely appealing Venus as your ruling planet. However, whenever the goddess forms a close relationship with unruly Uranus (as she does on Feb. 7), there's no telling what will happen or how you'll wind up feeling. Since these players hook up in Pisces, either in your health and service area or, more likely, in your house of romance and recreation, they can have a significant impact on how you'll spend Valentine's Day—and on how expensive it'll be.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

Read for Libra. Some Scorpions may be thrilled to be caught up in the drama that an unforeseen event on Valentine's Day provokes. Others could be appalled that they won't be able to control the outcome of what happens when rebellious Uranus and affectionate Venus get together this week. However, all of you should try to remember your dreams because they may help you resolve a tricky family matter—especially one that's dependent on a career decision you're reluctant to make. Can it wait until May?

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

Uranus, the Awakener, plays a pivotal role in how this month unfolds. Since Uranus has been in dualistic Pisces since March 2003, by now you should have a working knowledge of how this unpredictable force operates: Sometimes it suddenly hurls you into the future; sometimes it disrupts immediate plans for the present. You might also realize what you can and can't do about these sporadic events. So when amiable Venus merges with Uranus this week, don't be surprised if a friendship falls apart or your favorite relative behaves badly. Either way, you get to pay.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

The Sea Goat's spiritual and aesthetic tendencies come to the fore when the creative sun merges with inspirational Neptune in Aquarius on Feb. 8. The practical Capricorn we know, love and, more to the point, depend on manages to show up (and show off) a few days later, when the sun focuses on your Saturn ruler's position in authoritative Leo. You get to have it both ways. Just be aware that Mercury's being retrograde in your house of assets and income might become more than a mere annoyance. Double-check the figures.

Ooh, That Smell

Diva this, diva that. You know who you are. Frankly, I'm sick of it. I've got news for you: Your s--- stinks too, just like the rest of ours. Probably even worse.
—Sick of Your S---

A Rant on the Ranting

Why so negative, people? Don't you know that the only reason Bostonians read the Impersonals is because we're hoping that the person who "spotted the hotty on the Red Line" or "gave you looks at Bukowski's" was talking about us? I've been reading the recent Impersonals, and too many say, "That a--hole…" or "Get a life…." It's called a fantasy. Let's have it. We want love.
—Still Seeking

Oh, and What Was Your Name Again?

How lucky am I to have someone like you? You keep me going, pushing me through the tough times. When I think of a life without you in it, I can hardly breathe. Knowing my days end in your presence is all I need. You are my best friend, my soul mate, my confidante, my hero—and you're sexy, too! Thanks for finding me, for putting up with me, for "getting" me and for loving me unconditionally. I only hope I do the same for you. Forever.
—Yours Very, Very Truly

Need a "Pen" Pal?

I'm writing to find a beautiful woman for a pen pal, like the people I always see in your magazine. I am incarcerated in Boston. My birthday is Aug. 19, 1971. I'm a Leo, medium height, medium build; I'm strong, have a brown complexion and speak Spanish. I love to walk on the beach, read novels and go to the movies. I have a good sense of humor and love children. I have two children of my own but am divorced. I'm doing two years; I get out in July or August 2008, but with good time, I may see parole in September. I need to find a good person, a beautiful lady to share my life with. Write me.

Unchain My Heart (Unlock My Cell)

I am a 40-year-old man who prides himself on being a gentleman. I'm normally an active, hard-working and motivated individual. Unfortunately, I am incarcerated for the next eight months for behavior that I truly regret and am remorseful for. True, I have made some mistakes, but I am not a violent criminal or a druggie. I've learned a valuable lesson through this experience and expect myself to be prudent in the future. I would love to hear from some women who have compassion and kindness in their hearts.

Pickup Lines 101

I just want to say hi to the adorable bus driver I see often. You drive the 101. You're young with dark hair, and you always wear a hat. I think you're hot!
—bus10107@hotmail.com

Something's Afoot

To the gorgeous blonde I met at Citybar on the Sunday evening before Martin Luther King Day: I know my toes aren't safe around your high heels, but I don't care! Your incredible charm and fantastic smile were one-in-a-million and left me wanting more. I was too preoccupied with my friends to be able to do anything about it then, but let me buy you a drink and make up for it.
—cityb114@yahoo.com

After the Fall

I want to thank the two gentlemen who stopped to help me gather up my belongings after I tripped and took an extraordinarily ungraceful whopper of a fall on Dec. 29 in the South End. And to the gentleman who came out of his gallery to offer his restroom to let me wash up, I want to thank you for your kindness. I apologize for you all having to witness my tumble; but the only thing injured was my pride!
—Clumsy on Clarendon

Driving Miss Crazy

To the b----bag who happened to veer into my lane and slam into the side of my black X5 on Jan. 19, I have one thing to say: good thinking. First, you obviously have some type of mental impairment, and I question whether you should be on the road at all. You have to question someone's driving skills when they have trouble simply staying in their lane, especially on Beacon Street. Whether you were turning off of Storrow Drive or not, just follow the lines, brainiac. The best was that you slammed into me with your hideous gold SUV, and then you got out of the car and had the gall to ask me what I was doing. I was proceeding down my lane, you idiot! Now, I ask you what you were doing, since you decided to drive away before we could exchange info. You just turned a typical accident into a crime scene. Like I said, good thinking. I got your license plate number!
—Beemer Steamer

This Is My Dance Space…

To the cow and her red-faced partner I see every day after work at Park Street station: What the f--- is your problem? Did your mother not teach you about common courtesy or personal space? If I'm standing on the platform and there's no one else around me for at least 20 feet, there's NO reason for you to stand so close to me that our coats touch. I know you're just a fat b---- who wants to be standing at the spot where the door opens when the train stops, so you can shove your way on before the others get off, but I don't want your ugly ass anywhere near me. And no, I will not move to accommodate you, because I was there first. FIND SOMEWHERE ELSE TO STAND. I've seen you force others to move by standing right up on them, but I'm sure you've noticed that I don't budge when you do that to me. I may be smaller than you, but you don't scare me. Did the elbow I stuck in your gut two weeks ago when you were behind me, trying to shove me out of the way, not give you the message? I'll try to be less subtle next time. I'm sick and tired of your uncouth behavior. Your boyfriend/husband used to have the decency to step back and let the others on before boarding, but I've seen his behavior deteriorate to your level as time goes on. The two of you are despicable. One day you'll be the elderly person who gets a seat stolen by some inconsiderate p---- like yourself. I'll be waiting and laughing when it happens.
—Annoyed Commuter

What Men Want

To certain single women in Boston: Stop already. The constant banter, the flirting, the pathetic desperation in your eyes and conversations. The games! Don't you get it? Guys want someone cool, independent, comfortable in her own skin, who doesn't care what every guy who crosses her path thinks of her body, her hair, her look. Just hang. Be cool! Enjoy life. Get an identity. That's how to win our hearts.
—A Concerned Citizen

UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

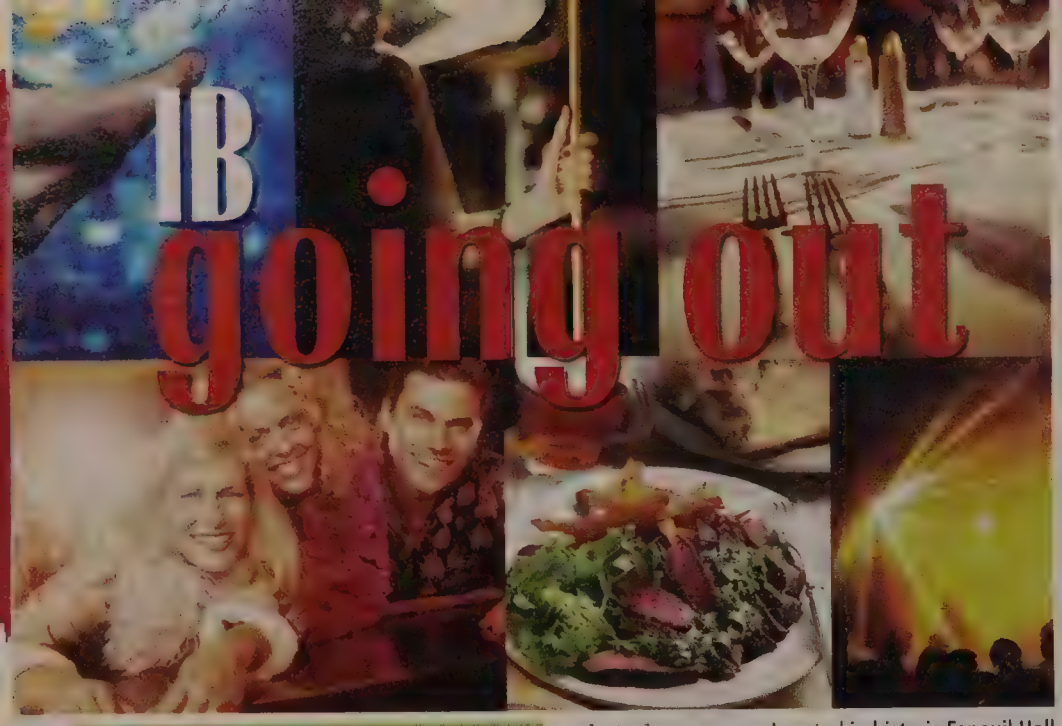
Flower girls Dorothy Bergold and Tellervo Korhonen took us on their trip to Finland. They said they liked the issue but didn't quite Finnish.

David Wert and Alicia Van Cott stopped for a quick photo at the Versace house in South Beach and narrowly escaped being eaten by Donatella.

After this shot, representatives Zack Space of Ohio (left) and Patrick Murphy of Pennsylvania joined forces and pushed Congress to name Stifler's Mom the official MILF of the United States.

Joel and Michelle Farber stopped at Milford Sound in New Zealand's beautiful Fiordland. It's not quite as nice as the Wollering Mjercedesland, but at least it's made in America.

At the Cosco shipyard in Nantong, China, Tim Corbett and Dan Flaherty posed with the IMPROPER and two silver helmets that bring a tear to our eye.



Representative Mazie Hirono of Hawaii is just happy that she hasn't been run over by Michelle Rodriguez—yet.

This pub has a total of 5 rooms, 3.5 bars, 2 floors, 5 big screen TV's and a pool table. The newest room is the ideal place to relax after work with co-workers on big comfy couches and a soothing atmosphere. The fare is a variety of Mexican, classic New England seafood and American favorites. Whoever you are, whatever you do, José's has something for everyone.

PARRIS Faneuil Hall Marketplace, Quincy Market Building, Boston 617-248-8800. www.parrisboston. com. Lounge. Cocktails. Dancing. Nightlife. Come see the lights of Parris. Sample the eclectic lounge menu featuring grilled pizza, oyster shooters and steak tartar. Sip a Classic, Apple or French 75 martini, and then motion onto the huge dance floor featuring live music with the best bands and DJs Thursday through Saturday. Named for the original architect of the Greek-revival-style building, Alexander Parris, you're nightlife experience at Parris will be Boston and beyond. Open 5pm - 2am Wedneday - Saturday. Cover charge on Friday and Saturday.

THE AVENUE SPORTS BAR & GRILL 1249 Commonwealth Avenue, Allston, 617-782-9508. www.avenuebar.com. Located right in Allston, food and sports are the heart of The Avenue. With over 30 beers on tap and a full menu this is the ideal bar to lounge, watch the game, and relax. Come take advantage of our DirectTV, Plasmas, 25 cent wings 4-7 daily, and $1.00 drafts. This favorite sports bar can transform into a party hangout as the weekends have a resident DJ.

THE HARP 85 Causeway St., Boston 617-742-1010. www.harpboston.com. Voted Boston Magazine's "Best After The Game", the Harp is a favorite downtown hotspot any day of the week, located directly across from the TD Banknorth Garden. Featuring live bands upstairs from Boston, Philadelphia and New York plus DJs spinning tunes downstairs, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights set the pace for the great high-energy environment. The Harp provides a crowd-pleasing menu with tastes from around the globe. Located in the heart of downtown Boston, the Harp also serves as an excellent meeting place for business luncheons, social gatherings and events.

BRUNCH

CLERY'S 113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874. www.irishconnection. com. Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar earned the title of the 2002-2006 Best of Boston's Best Neighborhood bar, serving more than 400 regulars. Enjoy one of the 16 draught beers either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle weather of New England turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

DILLON'S 955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818. www.irishconnection. com. Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. Accented by dark bamboo woodwork and large banana fans, it's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Relax with a Blueberry Pie Martini in the warmly lit lounge or an ice cold beer on the patio. Then retire to the dining room where you can browse the eclectic Continental menu featuring a variety of items, including pan seared tuna salad, steak sirloin, shrimp tempura, Gourmet prosciutto pizza and more. Also featuring a tapas bar, perfect for sharing, with tasty bites such as Fried Aubergine, Chicken & Chorizo, and Saigon Scallops. Dillon's is open seven days a week from 10:00 a.m. – 2 a.m., serving brunch on Saturday and Sunday beginning at 10:00 a.m.

PUTTIN' ON THE... WELL, WHATEVER...

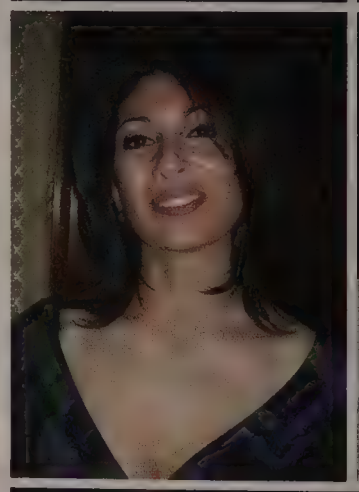
A significant bit of Boston history was made when the building at the corner of Arlington and Newbury streets officially became the Taj Boston Hotel, after spending the first 79 years of its existence as the Ritz-Carlton (the first in the U.S.). To mark such a momentous occasion, a party of bacchanalian proportions was held, featuring all the appropriate hoopla and hullabaloo.

The hotel's new owners—an Indian conglomerate that operates historic luxury properties around the world—was represented by managing director Raymond Bickson and sales director Gev Patel, while the VIPs on hand included such local notables as velvet-throated broadcasting behemoth Ron Della Chiesa and the vivacious Joyce (just back from Buenos Aires), stunning entertainmentatrix Joyce Kulhawik, valet parking magnate Andrew Tuchler, überdeveloper Steve Weiner and brunette bombshell Roberta, party planner non-pareil Bryan Rafanelli, Our Lady of Chanel Barbara Lemperley Grant, impossibly good-looking and stylish couple Evelyn and Sundar Subramaniam, City Hall mover and shaker Tony Nunziante, powerbroker Marjorie Aarons-Barron, real estate mack daddy Michael Tarshi with the flawless Adela Agolli, bubbly blonde cutie Lynn Dale, megasocialites Joan and Ted Benard Cutler, and so on and so forth down the list of high profile types who're used to treating the Ritz (and now the Taj) as their second home.

As for a consensus on the new hotel, everyone seemed both pleased and impressed, as the new owners have changed blessedly little, especially among the beloved staff.

As one guest put it: "The true test of whether it lives up to the old Ritz is how good their martinis are." Taking a sip, he added, "And this place is still a classic."

IN VINO VERITAS...



Just as the New Year's Eve hangover was beginning to fade, the Boston Harbor Hotel hosted the opening of the 18th annual Boston Wine Festival, where oenophiles, enthusiasts and assorted other winos gathered to sample some sublime vintages at what is, incidentally, one of the few events where it's considered socially acceptable to take a sip of something and then spit it out.

Seen oohing and aahing over the pigeon's-blood color of such-and-such a cabernet or the whiff of cat's piss in the Château Whatever chardonnay were such folks as the festival's founder, chef Daniel Bruce, Channel 7 anchor Jeff Glor and his babe-alicious wife, Nicole, his colleagues, Deanna Lites, Mary Schwager and Janet Wu, the latter with her improbably tall husband, Allan MacKinnon, the ever affable Ted Carey, the stunningly beautiful Kim Richard, TV eminences Mike Macklin and Gail Huff with her husband, senator Scott Brown (better known as parents of American Idol contestant Ayla), investment banking smoothie Tristan Mouligne with the seriously gorgeous Robin Rehfield, and numerous others who sniffed, sipped, swished and swallowed with a rapture bordering on the religious.

Of course, in addition to all the wine there was plenty of good eats, and for a philistine the whole thing was nothing more than an opportunity to gorge and imbibe until bursting, although as one barbarian commented, "I'd like a whole glass of wine, instead of a tiny little sip."

Then there was the woman who admitted to being a bit of a wine bore but said that there were some people there who took the whole thing a bit too seriously.

"I mean, come on," she said. "There's an Australian shiraz maker here handing out toothbrushes."

To which all we have to say is: So what? Wouldn't it be nice if your dentist handed you a glass of wine? iB

THINKING SPRING

None of us here in Boston is ready to break out the shorts and sandals quite yet, but it's heartening to know that warmer weather will arrive sooner or later. Boston's shopping meccas are already broadcasting that fact, shifting their merchandise from heavy and dark to light and bright, and in this, our annual spring fashion preview, we bring you some of the most interesting trends you'll be seeing on the racks for the coming season.

Fashion editor Victor Vargas highlights the looks he likes best for men and women—and this year, in particular, there are options to suit almost any mood or style, with retro influences from the '40s, the '60s and even the New Wave '80s.

SCORNING THE SINGLES

Boy, you guys made a huge mistake. Not only are the eligible singles ("20 Hit Singles," Feb. 7) all ugly, they're also really unimpressive. You could've at least picked people who have jobs and are dateable. I have to wonder where you did your research. Overall, I'm very disappointed with your choices.

—BROOKE CHRISTIAN
Boston

CHOICE WORDS

Yes, I too would like to have a female president. But as Gloria Steinem says in her interview ("Soroff/On," Jan. 24), we need an open-minded feminist who's pro-choice enough not to be intimidated by the religious right wing. In the past 20 years, the few female candidates running for president have been totally on the pro-life side of the spectrum. We now need one to stand up for real choice.

—ADRIENNE KENT
Waltham

OH, MAN!

Ezra Dyer's "Ultimate Testosterone Test II" in the Man Issue (Jan. 24) was so damn funny, I felt compelled to write the IMPROPER. Wow—thanks for the much-needed belly laugh. Having just moved here from L.A., I can only hope to enjoy Ezra's humor in the IMPROPER for a while longer, until he's inevitably snatched away by a higher-circulation publication.

POPS: LAURA B. KK

Boston's Pops

Chef Felino Samson is on a mission to bring familiarity back to the plate. His eponymous new South End eatery, Pops—a nickname from his days running the kitchen at Bomboa—forgoes feats of gastronomic gimmickry in favor of simple, fuss-free food. "I'm trying to take the pretense out of cooking," he says, with "a menu that isn't hard to read." Indeed, white truffle oil is about as exotic as it gets.

The New American fare riffs on old favorites, tweaking them for modern tastes—though never too far afield. Consider Samson's take on the classic veal braise, osso buco ($20). While he swaps out the usual veal shank for veal breast, the accompaniments of escarole and polenta are new close to tradition. The mushroom gravy served with the steak frites ($20) may use shiitakes rather than run-of-the-mill buttons, and the fries may be tossed with garlic and thyme, but this is familiar comfort food through and through. (And where else in town can you get steak frites for 20 bucks?)

Pops also serves up a collection of souped up sides, including a casserole of gnocchi and cheese with leek cream and bacon ($10), a dressed-up (yet still recognizable) cousin of mac 'n' cheese. At lunchtime, that mushroom gravy shows up in Kobe beef meatloaf ($14), but if you're in the mood for lighter, more casual midday fare, Samson also offers a selection of sandwiches like the Shrimp Po' Boy ($10)—crispy shrimp with tomato-ginger mayonnaise on a brioche roll—served with homemade pickles and chips. Brunch adds such sweet and savory staples as blueberry pancakes ($9) and a French-inspired potato-garlic omelet ($8). Banana fritters with dulce de leche ($8) ooze comfort, a recurring theme.

"It's like coming to a friend's [home]," Samson says—if your friend happens to be a South Ender with impeccable taste, that is. Pops' paisley wallpaper, marble floors and tables, and Louis XIV chairs suggest a stylish salon. Out back, the 12-seat greenhouse would put Ralph Lauren at ease with its ceiling draped in striped fabric and shabby-chic chandeliers. A homey vibe pervades the 36-seat space (formerly occupied by Perdix), enhanced by the vintage photos of Boston from the '20s and '30s flashing across wall-mounted flat screens.

Opposite the stove, the bar's the spot for watching Samson, who left Bomboa last fall following stints at other high-end eateries. Looking ahead, he hopes to plant an herb garden and grill in the backyard. "This is my way of getting back into the kitchen, to old-school cooking," he says. As for foams and their ilk: "I'm tired of experimental chemistry." Pops Restaurant, 560 Tremont St., Boston (617-695-1250).

Katz, Off-Broadway

Newton resident Jonathan Katz is best known for his animated TV show, Dr. Katz: Professional Therapist, which aired on Comedy Central in the late '90s. He's worked the talk-show circuit, appeared in movies (like Daddy Daycare and the upcoming Are We Done Yet?) and on Jan. 30 released his first comedy CD, Caffeinated. Katz performs at Jimmy Tingle's Off-Broadway Theatre March 2 and 3.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: So what do you have planned for these Boston shows? A little bit of comedy? A little bit of music? Maybe some burlesque?

Jonathan Katz: We're calling it "Working the Room." I think the goal, through different audio and visual and PowerPoint effects, is to create the illusion that the audience is in many different rooms. Basically, I just want to make them feel slightly comfortable, so they'll think I'm slightly funny.

IB: You've lived in Boston for a while now, right?

JK: I made my first appearance on David Letterman in 1985 and moved to Newton with my wife the next day. Seems like a very counterintuitive career move now, but my wife is from Newton and we've been here ever since.

IB: What's the funniest thing about Boston?

JK: I'd say the role that sports play in people's lives here. I remember the day the Berlin Wall fell and the front page of the Globe read: "The Berlin Wall falls as Bird scores 40."

IB: Can you tell us a little about the new CD?

JK: The most exciting thing about it was the way it was compiled. It's a compilation of live recordings that might seem like they were all taped in one night. But it's actually a collection of many different shows. I think it's great to document stuff like that after doing clubs for so many years.

IB: Anyone you wished you'd gotten on Dr. Katz's couch?

JK: Two people: Johnny Carson and Ronnie Shakes. Shakes was a terrific comedian who died from a heart attack at a very young age. He had a great joke that went, "I've been in therapy for 12 years and my therapist just said something that brought tears to my eyes… 'No hablo inglés.'"

IB: Are you surprised Squigglevison never took off?

JK: Not at all. Squigglevision, as wonderful as it was, did cause epileptic episodes. And my wife could never stay awake for a full show… but that had nothing to do with Squigglevision.

TASTY TIDBITS

Out of the Blu

Rolling Rocca... Last issue, we told you that Jody Adams is revamping Rialto into an Italian eatery. Now Michela Larson, Adams' former business partner, is entering the fray with an Italian venture of her own. Rocca Kitchen & Bar, a neighborhood spot at 500 Harrison Ave. that Larson will co-own with restaurateur Gary Sullivan, is slated to open in late March with a menu inspired by Larson's numerous trips to the small, seaside Italian region of Liguria. (For those of you who dozed off during Italian Regional Cuisines 101, that means home-style cooking heavy on seafood, pestos and fresh veggies.) Cooking duties fall to chef Tom Fosnot, who left his post as executive chef at Blu to join Larson's team. As for Blu, they didn't wait long in replacing Fosnot with his former sous chef, Michael Kraus.

Old Nog, New Tricks... The Somerville drinking scene will be more somber—and certainly more sober—after Tír na NÓg closes Feb. 27. The Irish pub and nightly music venue became a Somerville staple during its decade in business. But something tells us the grief won't be permanent. Rumor has it that the Nog's owners already have their sights set on a new spot. Although they won't reveal the exact location until the deal is final, you can keep up with the latest rumors at www.myspace.com/friendsofthenog, a site set up by a couple of Nog regulars to help fans of the bar stay up-to-date with the latest news.

Clockwise from top: Rocca's Michela Larson and Gary Sullivan; a Popeye's fried chicken meal—with all the trimmings; El Paisa's seared salmon with corn flan in a lemon-butter sauce

Haru Doing?... It's been about a year since Dick's Last Resort made the move to Faneuil Hall, leaving behind a 6,100-square-foot vacancy at the Pru. But this fall the Huntington Ave. space will be vacant no more. Haru—a Japanese eatery from Benihana Inc.—will open a 165-seat restaurant that'll include a sushi bar, a lounge area, private event space and outdoor seating.

The Sailor Man Cometh... We try not to make a habit of quoting Adam Sandler movies, but as Little Nicky so eloquently opined, "Popeye's chicken is the shit!" Lucky for us, Popeye's spicy, greasy (in a good way) chicken is coming to town. The chicken-and-biscuit chain's first Boston store is scheduled to open March 12 in Kenmore Square, giving city dwellers easy access to its tasty brand of cajun-style chicken, red beans and rice that once could only be enjoyed at the airport food court or by driving to Brockton. Now there's no need to leave the ground—or civilized society. 645 Beacon St., Boston.

Eastie Eats... The new year brought a new dining option to the East Boston restaurant landscape in the form of El Paisa, a Spanish/American spot on Bennington Street across from Zafferano's. The menu features a solid mix of meat and fish entrées, like pan-seared salmon, steak and pork bellies, ranging from $13 to $18. El Paisa seats about 70 diners and is open for lunch and dinner seven days a week. 1012 Bennington St., Boston (617-569-5267). —RL

Caffeine Clean

Laurie Bohler is a bit of a mad scientist, of the entrepreneurial variety. At age 5, she snagged her mom's best parfum, poured an inch into Dixie cups, added H_2O and sold it to neighbors. These days Redmond brews her potions in her South End kitchen, using essential oils, tea extracts and whatever else she finds in the fridge. After hand mixing small batches, she pops open champagne and invites over her guy and girlfriends to act as guinea pigs. The successful blends land in containers labeled LaLu (her childhood nickname), and on boutique counters throughout Boston. Our favorite is Mocha Thin and Minty Firming Scrub and Glow ($30), a gorgeous cocoa-colored concoction of sea salt and organic ground coffee infused with oils and extracts, including invigorating peppermint and delicious dark chocolate. When questioned about the offbeat choices, Bohler simply replies, "I love coffee and saw a lot of research on how caffeine firms the skin... and chocolate, being an antioxidant, has the same effect." We're addicted. Available at Koo de Kir, 65 Chestnut St., Boston (617-723-8111); www.koodekir.com. —Marni Elyse Katz

Trivia Nights

Got a good head on your shoulders, stuffed with useless knowledge? Put all those facts you've memorized to use, solo or as part of a team of friends, at a local trivia night. You may even take home a prize.

Asgard
Tuesdays at 9 pm
350 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-577-9100)
Boasting the longest-running trivia night in Central Square, Asgard caters to intellectual types looking for a challenge. Bring your A game to this smarty party: Students from MIT and Harvard often vie for the title and a gift certificate to the restaurant.

Charlie's Kitchen
Sundays at 8 pm
10 Eliot St., Cambridge (617-492-9646)
With a wide variety of categories covering everything from geography to music, Charlie's Kitchen provides a competitive night for a younger college scene. Creative group names are a tradition here; a marvelous moniker is a must.

Purple Shamrock
Mondays at 8 pm
1 Union St., Boston (617-227-2060)
At the Purple Shamrock, trivia nuts get the chance to compete in a bonus round about local ski mountains for a buy-one-get-one-free ski pass. Weekly prizes include $25 and $50 gift certificates to the Shamrock, as well as other local spots like Clerys, Dillon's and Jose McIntyre's.

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Looking for Mr. Goodbar... It's Saturday night, you're looking hot, you're ready to howl. Just one problem: He might be there. With her. The folks at Baroptic.com have one solution. Their site provides live Internet feed from more than 60 local bars and nightclubs, including Felt, Jurys, Aria, Avalon and the Paradise Lounge. Check out the real-time action online or on a Windows-based mobile gadget, and give Sleazy (and Skanky) the slip once and for all. On the other hand, if you're looking particularly fierce that night, you'll know just where to show up. www.baroptic.com.

Playing the Field... Baseball isn't the only sport at Fenway this year. NESN's new reality show, Sox Appeal, will give Boston singles a chance to try their luck at the game of love. Set to film (and air) this summer, with casting in April, every episode follows a contestant as he or she meets three dating hopefuls during a game at Fenway (one every two innings). At the seventh-inning stretch, the bachelor(ette) makes his or her choice. Maybe the diamond really is a girl's best friend? www.sox-appeal.com.

Frock of Ages... Who better to open a vintage clothing shop called History than a former high-school history teacher? That expertise also lets owner Rachel Hirsch do more than line the racks of her quirky Cambridge shop with retro looks. She takes shoppers on a tour through the ages with clothes separated by eras, from the big-band '40s to the present day. Hirsch handpicks every item, tagging each with a story from the decade it was made. Which means you're not really shopping—you're investing in your education. 1693 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-868-5400).

New Chapter... Newtonville Books owner Tim Huggins is leaving the book business, and he's not looking back. But Boston's bookworms can rest easy now that his former employee Mary Cotton has bought the place. Cotton says she had two motivations for saving the store. First, she didn't want to see another independent bookstore close its doors. And on a more sentimental note, she met her husband there. Cotton does have a few changes in store, including a new used-book section, writing workshops and screenings of films based on books. 296 Walnut St., Newton (617-244-6619). www.newtonvillebooks.com

Head to Head... The boys behind Bern, the action-sports helmet company that got its start in the back of a Duxbury barn, have been in the spotlight as of late. Their one-stop helmet—ideal for snowboarding and skiing, but also canoeing, skating, biking and more—has earned quite a following. But with the recent launch of an almost-identical helmet by industry giant Burton, Bern is feeling the squeeze. Bern marketing manager Josh Walker says he's met with patent lawyers and is ready to rumble. "We have a ton of respect for Burton," Walker says. "But they're the biggest brand in the industry and they're trying to knock off us little guys. It's weird." But Burton says they've been working on their design for years. "Competing products often have parallel developments and designs when it comes to fashion and styling," says a Burton rep. Stay tuned. www.bernunlimited.com; www.burton.com. —Leslie P. Kilgore rfection has its price.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

LOSER CRUISER

Fanny-pack your bags, we're going on a cruise.

I'm not usually a package-deal kind of traveler. I resent the idea that you'd need someone to plan your every move while you're on vacation—"Please, tour operator, hold my hand and tell me how to have fun." I've holed up in an old mission on top of a mountain in the Himalayas. I've partied in Kuta, Bali, a town famed for its surfing and, more recently, its terrorist bombings. I've learned the hard way that some public bathroom stalls in Beijing don't have doors... or toilets. So if you want to give me crap about going on a Carnival cruise, you can shove it. That's right: come April, I'm packing my Funbags and climbing aboard a Funship.

Most people under the age of 87 have a preformed opinion that cruises are lame. I understand where they're coming from, for exactly the reasons I just mentioned. Take Kuta, for example. A lot of people who visit Bali never leave the safe enclave of resorts that are clustered together behind a gated road. Kuta's about a 15-minute cab ride away, and the Disney World manicured resort ambiance is quickly replaced by a dusty street where every other dude is trying to sell you weed (even though the penalty for drug-dealing in Indonesia is rather severe: death). You're propositioned by hookers. Suddenly the drinks cost about 10 cents, and you're worried about what's in them. Hookers, drugs, the concern that your cabbie might drive you out into the jungle and make a chalice out of your skull—that's the kind of fun you don't get on the Royal Caribbean shore excursions.

However, I'm also a believer that sometimes, a vacation can just be a vacation. Tell me, what's so wrong with sitting by a pool, sipping drinks on a boat en route to a balmy tropical island? Occasionally you might get up and play some blackjack or stuff your face at a pizza bar. Then you wake up in the morning and you're docked next to Paradise Island. I got a little bit fired up just writing that.

I'll concede that cruises are inherently cheesy. You go to cheesy places on a cheesy ship with cheesy people. I checked out the online photo gallery for the boat we're taking, the Carnival Fascination, and the decor looks like a cross between a Nevada brothel and Liberace's bedroom—and that's just the onboard hospital. You should see the casino.

But who cares? What are you trying to prove with your vacation? Say you're one of those people who flies off to Africa to climb Mount Kilimanjaro. Well, guess what? Based on the IMPROPER Sightings photos we get, half of Boston climbed Mount Kilimanjaro last year, and the other half went to Machu Picchu. You're not blazing any new frontiers, Davy Crockett, so every now and then you may as well put down your ice axe and your diarrhea pills, strap on a fanny pack and hit up Señor Frog's for a Jäger bomb.

My friends who've never been on a cruise think that my cruise advocacy is massively uncool and a sign of early-onset geriatric dementia. They believe that there's a dearth of excitement on cruises; I say it all depends on who you go with.

On the one cruise I've taken, a member of our party significantly livened up the stop in Jamaica. He got a wee bit tipsy in Ocho Rios and, upon his return to the ship, proceeded to topple off a balcony down to the next deck, where he landed outside the captain's lounge. If that didn't get the crew's attention, then his next move certainly did: He barged into the lounge and, despite his freshly fractured ankle, began wrecking the joint to the best of his ability. This earned him a trip to the cruise ship brig, where it was also discovered that he brought aboard a sample of some of Jamaica's native flora. Long story short: arrested, deported back to the U.S., end of cruise. Unfortunately, I can't repeat the best part of his explanation about why he fell off the balcony in the first place. Suffice it to say that we were all quite skeptical, considering the fact that he was still wearing his combat boots when he fell. For certain activities, you take off your boots. Let's leave it at that.

So far, I've successfully enlisted four friends to join me on the cruise. Everyone else I know says they're busy that week doing cooler things, free-diving in Belarus and base-jumping off giraffes in the Kalahari. Well, they aren't the only ones on a trip that holds the potential for face-to-face encounters with abject terror. Does anyone know if Kathie Lee Gifford is still affiliated with Carnival? iB

BY CHRIS COLLINS

BITTER COUCH POTATO

So much for Miami; it's time for Fort Myers.

Sure, I watched the Super Bowl. And just like everyone else, I was bored silly—not to mention a little bitter.

Come to think of it, the same thing happened a year ago when the Pittsburgh Steelers beat the pathetic Seattle Seahawks. I was bitter and bored then, too.

Why was I home, chilled to the bone? Why wasn't I in South Beach? The Super Bowl in Miami is a can't-miss event, and here I was, missing it. Even Johnny "Benedict Arnold" Damon was there, and he'd had a baby girl just a month earlier. I guess I've been taking this yearly Super Bowl trek for granted. Heck, three in four years is pretty consistent. And as long as Bill Belichick and Tom Brady are around, I pretty much expect to be somewhere warm the first week of every February.

So yes, I had a tough time watching the Colts-Bears game. The Patriots, I believe, were the best team in the NFL. But I woke up from a Mike Tyson uppercut and realized the local ponds were finally freezing and I'd be around to see it. For now.

Oh, there's a trip to Florida on my horizon—just not to South Beach. Instead of the Clevelander and Nikki Beach Club, it'll be Bennigan's and Friday's for me. Sigh. (Nothing against the national chains that litter Fort Myers, but it ain't South Beach.)

Yeah, beautiful Fort Myers, Fla. Home of the Boston Yankees. Or is it the New York Red Sox? If I sound confused here, that's because I am. It wasn't so long ago that Red Sox owner John Henry, pontificating on what's wrong with baseball, pointed his finger at the reckless spending propagated by the Yankees. He basically insinuated that the Yankees have made a mockery out of the salary structure, with $12 million players (per year!) sprinkled in between the $20 million players.

At first I bought it. The Yankees bought championships. They were Satan. "Preach on, John Henry!" I said.

Well, somebody might want to inform Mr. Henry of this fact: The Red Sox have become the Yankees. And Mr. Henry is just Mr. Steinbrenner in diapers.

Spend, baby, spend. A Great Society liberal couldn't have done it better this offseason, with the Sox paying $103 million for a guy—Daisuke Matsuzaka—who's never played in the major leagues.

Then comes $70 million for J.D. Drew, a guy who wouldn't know a full season if it hit him in the face, followed by another $36 million for Julio Lugo. I'm still trying to figure the latter out. Add it all up and $212 million is going out, and in return we're getting one All-Star appearance. Sure, I'm being tough, but those are the facts.

What else can you say, except that the Red Sox have adopted the Yankees' approach of overspending? What happened to the Billy Beane approach? You know, the more-with-less mantra.

What happened to building a Major League roster through the draft and minor league instruction, inserting some young players into the lineup so the payroll doesn't skyrocket?

It's entirely possible that the Red Sox, sporting the second-highest payroll in baseball, could miss the playoffs again. Nothing is a sure thing. Last year, cancer (Jon Lester), heart problems (David Ortiz) and arm trouble (Jonathan Papelbon) were unplanned events thrust upon this franchise, killing all hopes of a September surge. But with even more money riding on the standings this year, a similar implosion will carry repercussions. (Theo Epstein, Larry Lucchino and Terry Francona, I'm looking at you.)

WHAT HAPPENED TO BUILDING A MAJOR LEAGUE ROSTER THROUGH THE DRAFT AND MINOR LEAGUE INSTRUCTION?

But let's be optimistic. As long as the Red Sox team bus stays out of traffic accidents, I could manage this team to the playoffs and a possible World Series title. Heck, even Grady Little could. I think.

As the Sox enter spring training with exactly one hole to fill (closer), they boast a lineup that makes even the Yankees envious.

Of course, nothing is easy. That one hole will probably turn into a Grand Canyon of problems, and come August we'll be moaning and groaning like we do each summer.

But I'm ready. I'm ready to get off my couch and put my canceled trip to South Beach behind me.

The pressure is on, Red Sox. iB

Real Men Wear Suits

Fashion advice from some old pros

It's February, and spring fashions are beginning to show up in retail stores. Do we care in these days of so-called business-casual? I don't know about you, but I wouldn't give a man in dress chinos and an opened-neck shirt my money to manage, unless perhaps I were in Cut 'n' Shoot, Texas. Female professionals never look as sloppy in their casual office attire as their clueless male counterparts.

But recently, I've heard that good taste in men's clothing is reasserting itself. Intrigued, I called one of my best-dressed friends. "The Duke," whom I nicknamed for his flair, often wears red Swiss leather bowling shoes or paisley ascots with his tweed jackets, or vests with gold embroidered bees. On certain people all this stuff looks great. He looks like he should be shooting little birds with the Duke of Windsor, except that the Boston Duke, during his working life, has never bought anything outside of Filene's Basement. Years ago, he gave a 20 dollar bill to a Basement salesman, saying, "You let me know early when certain stores are dropping off their merchandise and this 20 will be the first of many." He has gorgeous suits, all bought in the Basement, whose sale tags he keeps in the jacket pocket to show people. "Suits are coming back," he told me. "But basically it's over. And so is the old Basement. Remember Duke's first lesson: Paying retail is always for fools."

Greg Thomajan, owner of Zareh's in Liberty Square, would disagree. A throwback to the days when there seemed to be a men's clothing store on every corner in Boston's financial district, Zareh's is a refuge from the philistines of bad taste and declining standards. Zareh's was started by Greg's father, Zareh, in 1933, during the Depression. Zareh Thomajan was a great salesman, and he was called "the thief of State Street" because his prices (and his standards) were high. But Greg's dad believed his nickname implied high praise. "My two loves," he wrote, "are Hedy Lamarr and liquor, but the first is unrequited." In one of Zareh's ads he described a customer, a high Brahmin banker who "wore a battered felt hat worn off center, an ancient tweed suit and a nondescript topcoat buttoned with absolutely no thought for relevance." Zareh never mentioned price and the man gave him a large order. Zareh handed him the invoice and the man peeled off the money without a word and headed out. Then the frugal WASP turned and said, "Who owns this store?"

Zareh replied that he did, and the man stuck out his hand and said, "My boy, you've more goddamn nerve than anyone I've met in a long time. I know you'll succeed."

Greg is a dying breed in a world devoted to multitasking. He takes no credit cards, only Zareh's store charge accounts. Like his idol, Ted Williams, Greg has incredible focus, which he trains on his store and his clients. When I took him to lunch at the Langham Hotel, he told me, "This is a unique day."

"Why's that?" I asked.

He smiled. "Because this is the first time I've been out to lunch in 40 years."

"Does that make you nervous?"

"Part of a happy life," he answered, "is that I can't wait to get to work on Mondays. I read books in the store between customers. My wife, Andrea, does the numbers, and our golden retriever, Grady, lies on the floor and adds color to all of our lives."

"Your clothes are expensive."

"You should dress every day as if you're on a job interview," Greg said. "Saying that, we keep it simple. Basically, we carry three lines of clothing, including Oxford, probably the finest made-to-measure tailors in America."

"I'll have to go into hock for a suit."

"You can wear my suits for years and always be in style. It's an investment."

So what observations does the man who never goes out for lunch have for us?

"Many of these came from my dad," he said, "but time compresses, so same bloodlines, same advice." They include:

1. Your watch shouldn't be exposed beyond your shirt cuff.

2. All those individual retailers in Boston failed because of lack of passion.

3. Never follow fads. It's pathetic how the masses follow each other. In the '60s, you were supposed to wear white turtlenecks with tuxedos. By the time we got 'em in, the fad was over.

5. Bow ties are for waiters and clowns.

6. If you're billing $600 an hour, shouldn't you dress like a professional?

Before I left him, I asked, "Did you see the Patriots are about to market gear for pets?"

After making a face, Greg said, "Well, I could see some items with Red Sox logos. But only high-end cashmere. And the logo's on the inside." IB

Soroff ON

DEBORAH VOIGT

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

One of the opera world's greatest living sopranos and widely regarded as the foremost performer of Richard Strauss, blonde diva Deborah Voigt made her major stage debut with the Boston Lyric Opera in Ariadne auf Naxos, a role she's now closely identified with. A native of Illinois, she moved to Florida as a teen and studied at California State University at Fullerton. She was a member of the San Francisco Opera's Merola Program, and she won both the gold medal at the International Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow and first prize at Philadelphia's Luciano Pavarotti Vocal Competition. Since her 1991 debut, she has gone on to perform at the world's greatest opera houses to widespread acclaim, but it was the headlines she made in 2004 that made her name familiar to non-opera lovers. The management at Covent Garden fired her from her role as Ariadne when she was unable to fit into a little black cocktail dress, sparking a controversy about weight discrimination that continues to this day. Since then, Voigt has lost 135 pounds. Her career, meanwhile, continues to flourish, her most recent appearance in Boston being with James Levine and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of Schoenberg and Beethoven at the beginning of February. She lives in New York and Vero Beach, Fla.

Jonathan Soroff: You look fabulous. Biggest beauty secret?

Deborah Voigt: Probably exercise at this point.

JS: How about weight-loss secrets?

DV: I don't think there's any great secret. It's called anything that tastes good, don't eat.

JS: So it's not "The opera's not over 'til the fat lady sings" anymore. Fill in this blank: The opera's not over 'til…

DV: … the gorgeous, svelte blonde finishes [illegible].

JS: Any choice words for the folks at Covent Garden?

DV: [Laughs.] I know who you're hiring.

JS: Can an opera really hinge on a dress?

DV: Well, I certainly don't think so, and if it does, then hire the person who works for your dress. That was my biggest complaint about the whole thing: not that they had an issue, but that they knew the issue existed before they contracted me.

JS: Do you think there's an unfair expectation about women on the stage?

DV: I think there's an unfair expectation about women across the board, whether it's onstage or in the business world or wherever.

JS: How has your weight loss affected your voice?

DV: I think if anything it's just freed me up, physically, onstage. It's much more comfortable to be onstage, and my body is a much more expressive instrument than I thought it was when I was walking around with 150 pounds more between me and the audience.

JS: Do you consider yourself a diva?

DV: I think any woman who excels in her field could be called a diva, so yeah, I don't mind that term. In some cases, it's sort of been equated with temperamental behavior, and I don't see that being the case. There's far too much competition, and if somebody shows up and she's a bitch, they'll find somebody who's not.

JS: So who would you rather do a love scene with: an opera hunk like Dmitri Hvorostovsky or Thomas Hampson?

DV: They're [both] pretty hunky, and it doesn't hurt to play a love scene opposite them. I hope they feel the same way about me.

JS: Any thoughts on Il Divo or other popera groups?

DV: I kind of turn the sound off when I hear Il Divo. I feel I'm being screamed at.

JS: Pavarotti or Domingo?

DV: Oooh, you're bad. Probably Domingo. It's a little bit too much the Pavarotti show—it's all about him—when he performs.

JS: Your major debut was in Boston. Any words for Boston's opera lovers?

DV: That Ariadne auf Naxos was really pivotal and got my career off the ground, so Boston has always had a special place in my heart. I always look forward to getting back there.

> "I LOVE DOING OPERA, BUT TO SIT IN THE HOUSE AND WATCH IT DOESN'T REALLY FLOAT MY BOAT."

JS: Favorite opera of all time?

DV: At the moment, I'm sort of on Salome. I just sang my first performances of her in Chicago and I found her to be just fascinating.

JS: Least favorite opera?

DV: Hmm. I'd probably say La Forza del Destino. I love the piece as a whole, and I love the music, but I find the character very uninteresting for me.

JS: Any truly mortifying moments onstage?

DV: Yes, when I debuted at the Vienna Staatsoper in Ariadne. In the prologue I'm playing the prima donna; my dressing room was located upstage, and the access to the lower stage was a very narrow, winding staircase. I made my entrance, and as I'm coming down this spiral staircase, I hear the audience kind of giggling. During intermission, my then-husband came backstage and informed me that I'd left the entire train of my dress behind and flashed the whole left side of the Vienna State Opera. It was charming… but they did have me back.

JS: I don't understand how you keep a straight face when you're two inches from someone's face. Don't you ever get the giggles?

DV: Not generally during a performance, no, but there have been many, many rehearsals where we've had to stop and put on the giggle-free helmet before continuing. Opera can be very slap-sticky if you've rehearsed it too long.

JS: Do you think you'd win on American Idol*?*

DV: Oh, probably not. For one thing, I'd never go on, and for another, I don't think they're ready for opera singers.

JS: Any musical guilty pleasures?

DV: I'm sort of very into Christina Aguilera. "Ain't No Other Man" is on my iPod and is a very big gym piece for me. I tend not to listen to classical music in my free time.

JS: So what else is on your iPod?

DV: James Taylor, John Mayer, Fifth Dimension, Alanis Morissette, Alison Kraus, the Carpenters.

JS: Are all opera fans nuts?

DV: I think there are degrees of nutsiness, and they all have such passion. I really sort of envy them. I don't know that I've ever felt that much passion for anything. I love doing opera, but to sit in the house and watch it doesn't really float my boat.

JS: So you don't go to the opera?

DV: Of course, especially when it's a new work or someone I want to see, but as a rule, I'd much rather go to a movie or the theater.

JS: Ever had a freaky fan encounter?

DV: Yeah, there have been times I had to establish boundaries. There was one woman who wanted to get a little bit closer than I was comfortable with. She was lovely, but that's not my team, and I had to draw a line.

JS: How far in the future are you booked?

DV: I have things penciled in through 2011, '12, and we're discussing a new production in 2013. It's solid for the next three years. It's a difficult part of the career, because it's hard to know what you'll want to do five years from now.

JS: How grueling is it to be onstage for two hours singing?

DV: It's pretty tiring. We are very much athletes, even if many of us don't look like we are. It's very physical and very draining, which is why I feel so much better having lost so much weight. My stamina is better.

JS: Hardest thing for you to sing?

DV: A character I'm not excited about, or who doesn't make an interesting journey throughout the opera that sort of ignites something in my belly.

JS: Last question: Would you ever pose for Playboy*?*

DV: [Laughs.] I don't think there are staples big enough to cover the bits I wouldn't want shown. iB

the '40s

The prevailing trend in Chanel and Prada's collections this season is the '40s. With her turbans, jewel-tone duchesse silk satins, and ultrashort or below-the-knee hemlines, Miuccia Prada shows pieces heavily influenced by Yves Saint Laurent's renditions of the '40s back in the '70s. Rounded-shoulder blouses and pencil skirts with a few fringed leather accents make a strong statement. Legs and platforms are everywhere this spring: At Chanel, Karl Lagerfeld conjures a '40s showgirl look, showing tweeds paired with sequined shorts, sexy, girly minidresses, and some fantastic plastic, lucite and glitter wedges.

the '60s

At Gucci, Frida Giannini has left the disco '70s in the past, and instead channels the '60s with skinny pants, boxy jackets and graphic shifts. Some of the most exciting pieces are her long scarf-print dresses for evening. In the same spirit, Karl Lagerfeld's collection for Fendi is a mix of '60s and '80s, featuring microdresses that bring Edie Sedgwick to mind, and batwing looks belted at the waist, including some in hot pink that find their muse in the '80s.

versace-ism

One of the most exciting stars on the London scene, Christopher Kane infused his entire spring collection with early-'90s references that recall Hervé Léger's bandage strip dresses, as well as Azzedine Alaia and Gianni Versace, whose house he currently has a consulting arrangement with. His miniconcoctions come in fluorescent colors and feature trimmings of stretch lace, chain mail and crystals. Alessandro Dell'Acqua also has chain mail dresses and mixed animal prints à la Gianni Versace, and at Dolce e Gabbana, there are dresses that pay homage to Versace's harness dresses of yore. For her part, Donatella Versace's collection is utterly modern, consisting of liquid-jersey corseted dresses and metallic extravaganzas that are already making celebrity appearances, as well as of-the-moment '70s graphics.

robo-chic

Futurism emerges as a directional trend with Balenciaga's Nicolas Ghesquière spearheading the effort. On the runway, he sent out a boyish silhouette featuring skinny tailoring and a double shoulder line, pieced patent leather dresses and futuristic metal leggings. At Calvin Klein the attitude is also modern, if less extreme: Francisco Costa's intricate dresses come in transparent, breathable fabrics that are pleated, tucked and folded, and hem lines are mostly short. A high-tech mesh jacket and one in crocodile fuse two trends: the '80s and the future. In a season classics

If fashion time-travel isn't for you, there are also designers that reference eras more subtly and/or continue to push their own singular point of view. Ralph Lauren, for example, shows a beautiful collection, mostly in black and white, with a silver streak through it for evening. He has bib-front shirts worn with shorts for day, or with a silver skirt for night, and a couple of floral and paisley dresses just right for anytime. With his unwavering commitment to a look best described as lady-chic, Oscar de la Renta has always given his customer just what she wants, and this season is no exception. Gorgeous bold prints shared the runway with rich colors such as azure, cherry and marigold. His dresses have body-conscious bodices and bubble skirts, and his separates as well as his dresses are crocheted and trimmed with lace. If a sense of drama is what you seek, look no further than the show-stopping beauty of Gianfranco Ferré's eveningwear. The red carpet–worthy numbers are a mix of polka dots, contrast stripes and lace in pleated chiffon and voile, all of it topped off with tassels.

translation

Runways aside, here's some practical advice for this season: Keep your skinny pants but put away the skinny jeans. Buy a few dresses, in '70s graphic prints or bold '80s colors. Wear your cropped jacket with everything, and add a pair of metallic flats. For evening, invest in those fabulous platforms—everyone is wearing them! Get your hands on something yellow, and stop laughing at those robotic or space age–looking pieces. Try it—you might like the futuristic heroine look. For day, an interesting T-shirt is what you want—no plain ones. Lastly, when it comes to important evenings, dive into the glamour of the past. There are plenty of eras to choose from.

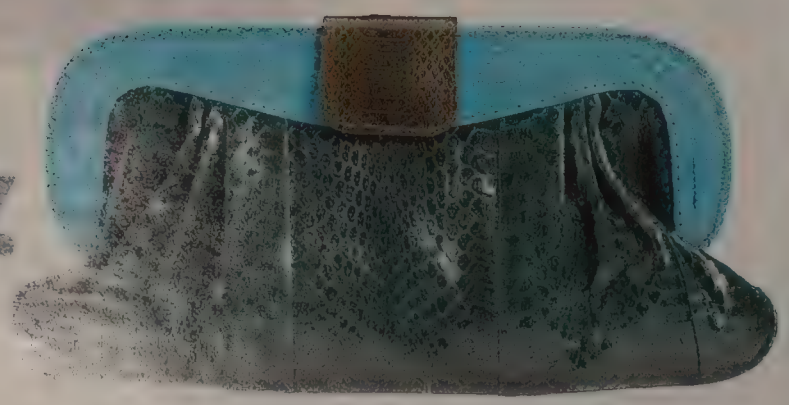
One of Boston's most innovative stores, Stel's is a three-year-old venture owned by husband-and-wife duo Dave Nauyokas and Tina Burgos and their business partner, Jon Callahan. The trio work as a team in selecting their boutique's offerings: Burgos buys the womenswear while Callahan serves as the menswear buyer, with Nauyokas weighing in on both. Stel's has quickly developed a following and a reputation for distinctive clothing that's priced moderately. I recently sat down with Burgos and Callahan to talk about what they look for in a line and the spring looks their customers will be sporting.

Victor Vargas: How did you meet?
Jon Callahan: I was working at Bergdorf Goodman in New York, and I decided to move back to Boston, so I took a job offer on the sales floor at Zegna where Tina was the assistant manager. As it turned out, we hit it off both personally and professionally.

VV: Where did the idea for Stel's come from?
JC: Tina had a strong business background [she has an MBA], and I had almost a decade of high-end retail. We soon found out we had similar fashion sensibilities, and we started talking about the need for a store in Boston with a distinct personality—where you could buy quality clothes without having to spend a fortune.
Tina Burgos: It took about a year of planning, but we wanted to go through the right channels. We spoke to lawyers and the small-business development center at Boston University.



1 Silk folded-cotton blouse with ruffle detail, by Gary Graham, $335.

2 Floor-print leather satchel with snakeskin trim, by Angel Jackson, $205.

3 Blue castorino-wash militaire shoe, by n.d.c., $400.

4 Grey/navy reversible checkered jacket, by YMC, $280.

5 Denim shorts with braided belt loops, by Marnie Skillings, $225.

6 Long-sleeved striped polo, by A.P.C., $80.

7 Snakeskin clutch, by Angel Jackson, $235.

8 White T-shirt with black tree logo, by Nom De Guerre, $75.

9 Pleated print skirt, by A.P.C., $305.

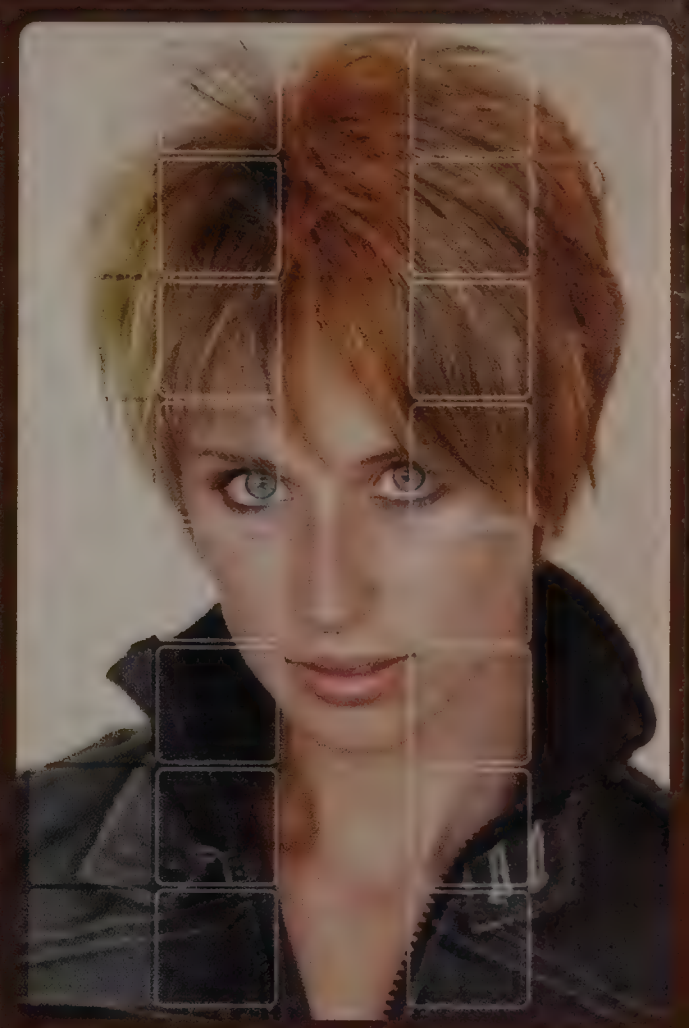
VV: When I first walked into your store, I noticed a unique point of view. What's the store's philosophy?
TB: The lines we carry are centered on our own sensibilities. We look for quality and exclusivity. None of our lines are in other small stores in the area, and if the line offers both a men's and women's collection, it's a bonus since we cater to both sexes.

VV: What made you decide to sell to both men and women?
JC: It was never really a question. All three of us like fashion, so we all wanted to enjoy the experience.

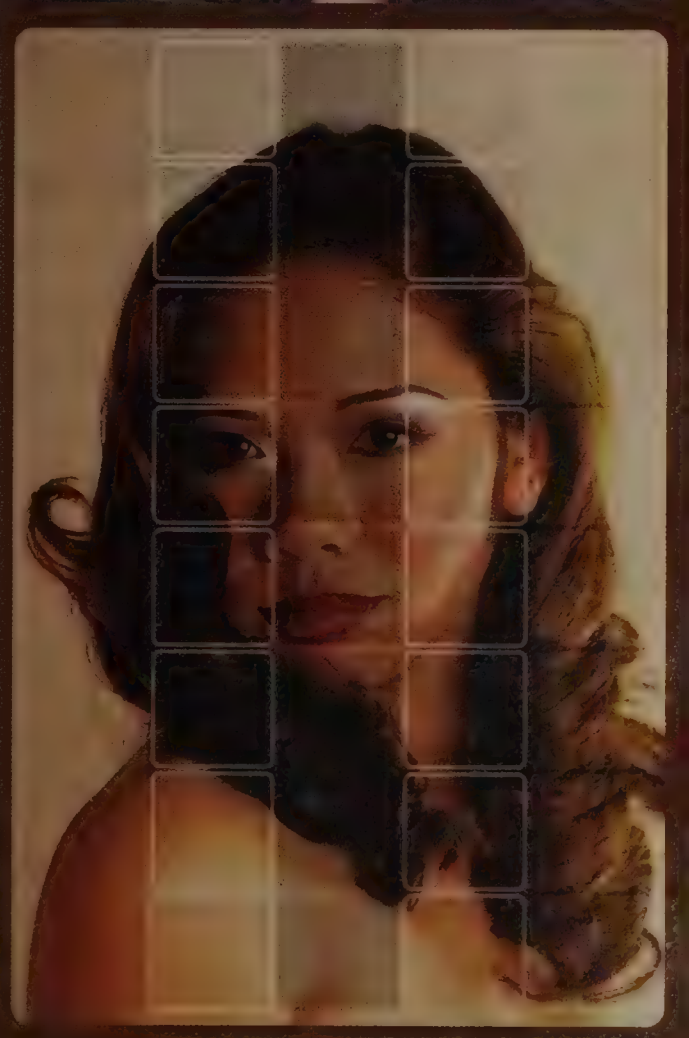
VV: In terms of designers, are there other factors that determine who you carry?
JC: We look for items that are utilitarian with an urban edge. We want our clothing to have a long life so that our clients get the most out of their purchase.
TB: We don't buy or hang by designer, which is a bit more difficult, because it all has to work together. We handpick each and every item.

VV: How do you look for new lines or designers to carry?
JC: We do our buys in New York and L.A., and we keep on the lookout. There are also times when we buy an item with a specific client in mind.
TB: Sometimes our clients mention a line they saw while traveling, and we take them seriously. We're both here six days a week so we know what they're saying.

VV: What's your demographic?
TB: High school to 50s, and sometimes we get the entire family. In the beginning we thought our client base would be 25–35 with disposable income, but fortunately we haven't had a shift in our client base, and that has made our business more sustainable.
JC: One of our first loyal customers was a 50-year-old man, and now he brings his college-age son in to shop.



VV: What do you think of Boston's sense of style?
JC: Personally, I think Boston is better-dressed than other cities. In Boston, people are looking for fashion and quality, and when they find it, they buy it.



VV: What can't women live without this spring/summer?
TB: A great little fitted jacket that can be worn with jeans or a nice summer dress. Nice prints, not obnoxious but pretty graphics and florals. Something yellow. Shorts—a wide range of them—and if you can wear them, short shorts. Color and texture in handbags, snakeskin, beautiful colors for flats. Accessories are the way to go if you're afraid of color.

VV: And for the guys?
JC: Lightweight sport coats. Mostly in cotton but more elegant than usual. Fuller-leg pants. Straight-legged jeans. Polos with pockets and interesting knits will replace the light sweatshirt. A great V-neck knit top with a T-shirt or dress shirt under a good sport coat and a great-fitting pant will look fresh. Higher-waisted jeans. Loafers, slip-ons and desert boots.

the unusual suspects

This spring, men's fashion runs the gamut from exotic luxury to modernist elegance. Here are four trends—spotted on the menswear runways—to check out in Boston stores this season.

On Colin (opposite): black linen suit, $1,995; black-and-brown animal-print shirt, $395; matching tie, $135; black leather belt with gold buckle, $250. All by Valentino Uomo at Valentino boutiques and select Saks Fifth Avenue stores. Yellow-gold triangle ring, by Gurhan, $2,045, at Persona Jewelry+. On Zev: one-button khaki suit with shawl collar, $1,995; embroidered vest, call for price; brass-beaded necklace, $395. All by Valentino Uomo at Valentino boutiques and select Saks Fifth Avenue stores.

Want to quickly update your wardrobe for this year's warm weather? Relaxed looks dominate several of the menswear giants' collections this season; go for an unstructured suit in a cotton fabric. Versace's collection, for example, epitomizes newly relaxed sensuality, with deconstructed jackets, low-waisted trousers with a full-cut leg, and crumpled fabrics. Valentino echoes the mood with slouchy silhouettes, beautiful shawl-collared suits paired with tank tops, and dress shorts subbing in for dress pants—paired with gold hardware–buckled leather belts. There's also Bottega Veneta's version of relaxed: a shirt-jacket-and-pants look in laundered linen, inspired by Burt Reynolds' leisure suits from the 1970s. When you're choosing your new suit, remember that unstructured doesn't mean loose and boxy: The new suits are fitted and body-embracing, but they don't have shoulder pads (some don't even have lining), and suit pants have a fuller but straight-cut leg.

be a sport

In these body-conscious times, it's all about looking like an athlete. That said, it's still not okay to socialize in your sweats. Instead, men's designers are incorporating the sporty trend into their collections. In his Paris show, Junya Watanabe went as far as to show tailored suits in colors and fabrics reminiscent of vintage track suits, as well as sweatshirt fabric used for biker jackets. Dolce e Gabbana jumps on the sporty bandwagon with a collection that includes every possible incarnation of shorts—in denim, in suede, a baggy, pleated version, and even a dress short that hits right at the knee and works with everything from a V-neck sweater to a polo shirt, or with a matching jacket for evening. In a '70s throwback, shorter shorts are back for men, too, but save those for the beach or pool—and only go down that road if you're truly fit.

On Zev: grey-check cotton sport jacket, $865; snow honeycomb-cotton button-down shirt, $275; pinstripe-and-check cotton pant, $450. All at Calvin Klein

On Zev: sky blue, two-piece washed-cotton suit, $2,490; deep-collared silk V-neck shirt with orange trim, $895; ivory belt, $605. All by Versace at Versace boutiques and select Saks Fifth Avenue stores. Palladium necklace, by Gurhan, $2,795, at Persona Jewelry*

return to the '60s

The '60s are back this spring, but there are two distinct ways to go with this look. If you can relate to that era's groovy flower-child aesthetic, there's plenty to choose from in florals, paisleys, and even accessories like ethnic, embroidered belts, sandals and suede-fringed boots for an exotic effect. Gucci's menswear defines the trend, with tie-print motif jackets, pinstriped hip-hugging pants, Beatle boots and tiny suede shorts. Meanwhile, Stefano Pilati's collection for YSL comprises pieces like untucked tunics and slightly cropped pants. If hippy-dippy holds no appeal, go for its polar opposite: the sleek '60s look. At Zegna, for example, the inspiration comes from the Kennedys in all their Camelot glory: sophisticated light-grey pinstriped suits with mother-of-pearl buttons, worn with cotton voile and pique shirts and silk gauze ties in yellows. Classic.

Lastly, a trend that's best exemplified by Francisco Costa at Calvin Klein this season is the return of 1980s New Wave: shirts with tiny button-down collars, jackets in fine-mesh, glazed linen, and leggings with blazers. Along similar, minimalist lines, for his second outing for Jil Sander, Raf Simons continues with his one-and-a-half-breasted coats and jackets, high-tech fabrics such as polyester poplin, and diamond-polished leathers. This style is stripped of all embellishment and detail, even down to concealed buttons and pants worn without belts, and its hallmark colors are black and light grey, paired with bright colors like fire-engine red and a rich blue shade called Yves Klein blue. Some fashionistas are calling the look Duran-y, after that memorable band. We love the '80s.

Birth: The Surprising History of How We Are Born*, by former Boston Globe reporter Tina Cassidy, covers the enormous range of ways babies have been brought into the world.

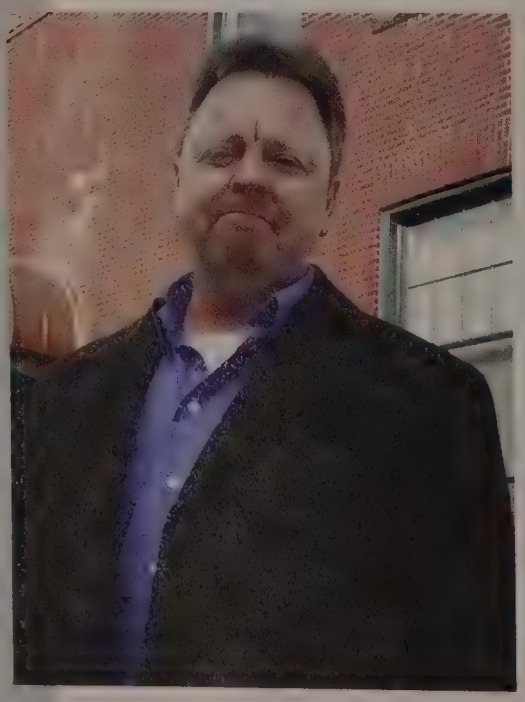
It happens to all of us, but it turns out being born has a rich, wild history. Tina Cassidy takes a lively look at this universal event, describing the many paths that lead to the "grinding pirouette" a baby's head makes while approaching the apocalyptic "Tada!" She visits our ancestor apes; the ancients, with their sometimes-problematic pelvises; the all-natural hippies; and the Caesarian-seeking career women of today (Wednesday at four, please!), all of whom somehow eject, as one doctor puts it, "that watermelon." Allegedly less primitive than deliveries of a few centuries ago—which included deeply invasive forceps, strapping down and yank- birth practices in the mid-20th century include howl-induc- twilight sleep." (Giving birth without a support group, enemas isotonics often wasn't much better.) Cassidy contrasts the rise of midwifery (practitioners have been burnt as witches, and male midwives sometimes dressed as women) against the rise of doctors. While gentler, cozier trends have emerged—water births, Lamaze breathing, less anesthesia, hubby and others in the birthing room, breast-feeding and rooming-in—each evolution has its backlash. Now epidurals kill pain, and 29 percent of American births are C-sections. But Cassidy's explorations of the anthropology (New Guinea tribesmen bathed in aromatic oils to "purify and anoint entry into fatherhood"), medicine and philosophies of birth are fascinating.

FLY IN AND PLUCK A TREASURE



Magpie (378-A Highland Ave., Somerville; moving in March to 416 Highland Ave.; 617-623-3330; www.magpie-store.com) sells handcrafted items of all kinds by upward of 150 artists.

Magpie is a shop full of the sort of hither-and-yon ingenuities that invite your surprise and pleasure. More than 150 crafters somehow coalesce to create the flavors here, often in soothing, pale shades of sherbet. Whimsical hipness is one Magpie niche, which includes ironic and amusing T-shirts designed by Abnormal Urban Clothing with skulls or graceful peacocks. Another is the ingenious reinvention of vintage mechanical objects: Beautiful little bike gears, now turned into card holders, strut their textured metal stuff. Nostalgic record albums, embedded in see-through plastic tote bags, are like dramatic canvases celebrating Frank "Romantic" Sinatra. And the ubiquitous iPod, awkwardly stringy once it's off the ear, plunks neatly into a variety of knitted wool "cozies." Couples shopping at Magpie coo in delight when they notice, for example, a lamp whose shade is delicately composed of those twirly little paper umbrellas that stir up party drinks. Coolness in color and style is also found in unusual purses decorated with chic, understated abstractions. Sweet old-fashioned things—little toys, mittens—are made of felt or boiled wool. And a little china vase asks, "Where is the fox? The grapes are ripe."

HOMEOWNER SWEET HOMEOWNER

Paul Mackey, deputy director of the Somerville Housing Authority, leads a three-session, nine-hour course that acquaints would-be homeowners with the realities of buying property. The city of Somerville (617-625-6600, ext. 2577; www.ci.somerville.ma.us) offers the course in April.

While this course is especially useful to folks currently in subsidized housing, people of all income levels can take it. In fact, 4,000 already have. And what a bargain at $25 for three classes! Teacher Paul Mackey discusses the ins and outs of various "mortgage products"; learning about them with the casual academic breezes blowing through makes it easier to judge an actual mortgage knowledgeably when it comes at you in the pressurized heat of purchase. The course is pitched to buyers looking at single-family, condo or multifamily properties, but it also offers guidelines for choosing tenants and the realities of being a landlord, as well as a discussion about the market's sharks (and how to avoid them). Guest speakers include the usual suspects: a real estate agent, a banker, an attorney and a home inspector. There are even financial incentives for some students; for instance, after you've completed the course, public housing authorities will invest a portion of your rent toward future home-buying. And even if you're a few years away from actually buying (because you need to save money or clean up your credit), empowered graduates are in closer touch with the realities of points, commissions, mortgages and emerging Somerville for-sales. (Note: This is a statewide program, so other cities also offer the course.)

DÉJÀ VU

Bouchée brings a touch of Parisian flair to the Newbury Street dining scene.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

I love the brasseries of Paris. I discovered them through my wife, whose long love affair with the City of Lights started in her teens and easily trumps my more touristy, later-in-life gastronomic exploration of the city. When she introduced me to Jean-Paul Bucher's Brasserie Flo on our honeymoon, I realized it was possible to dine well in Paris—in a handsomely appointed space with a lively ambiance that's devoid of pretension—without breaking the bank.

Originally, brasseries were restaurants associated with breweries, where beer washed down hearty peasant preparations like choucroute garni (sauerkraut served with smoked meats and sausage). There are still traditional brasseries in Alsace, where the beer connection continues, but in Paris the category is more associated with Belle Époque décor (gleaming mirrors, polished brass, rich woodwork and stained glass), flexible dining hours, traditional dishes from various French regions and moderate prices. Charles Sarkis, Boston's restaurateur extraordinaire, whose venues range from Abe and Louie's to Papa Razzi to Joe's American, has brought us a marvelous urban brasserie right in the heart of the Back Bay. Bouchée occupies the townhouse formerly graced by DuBarry, on Newbury Street at Dartmouth. The landmark trompe l'oeil covering its east façade is, alas, now gone, but inside Sarkis and his designers have created a space that marvelously evokes the brasseries of Paris—notwithstanding its below-grade entrance, a feature rare in that city—and I thought it meanspirited and off base when one local scribe deprecated the décor as "Disneyfied Paris."

On Bouchée's lower level, two dozen [illegible] line a rich mahogany bar with a zinc [illegible] while diners sit at booths and banquettes upholstered in red leather with nail-[illegible]. An eclectic array of fixtures provide light, and hardwood flooring [illegible] with small, square marble tiles. Also downstairs, one can peer through large plate-glass windows into the kitchen and watch a phalanx of busy line cooks at their stoves. Upstairs, tables set with white napery strike a slightly more sedate tone. Large tapered wine glasses bear the Bouchée name, with sturdy white brasserie dinnerware similarly marked. Individual brass picture lamps illuminate the large, colorful French posters in black-and-gold, beaded wooden frames from above. Disneyfied, indeed!

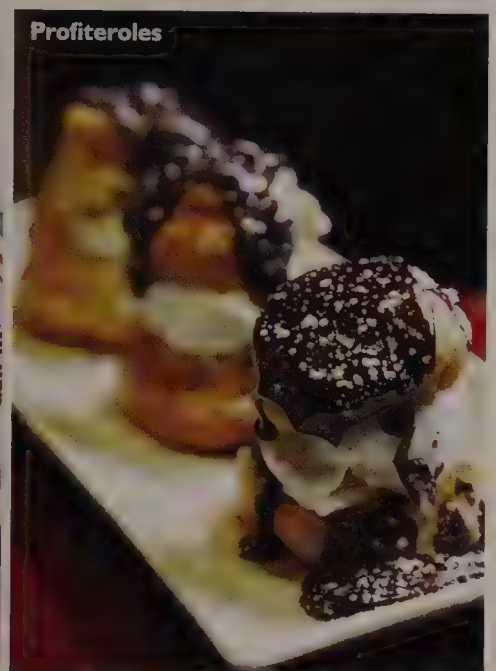
Appetizers struck me as uneven, with escargots ($10) disappointing in their blandness, as if the person in charge of the garlic had pulled his punches. Worse, these half-dozen shelled crustaceans shared little wells in their cast-iron serving dish with soggy breadcrumbs, a most un-French excrescence. In its steak tartare ($13), the kitchen went overboard with the capers and Dijon mustard, overpowering the dish and delivering little in the way of beef flavor. Onion soup gratinée ($8) got us back on track, with decent broth made sweet by the caramelized onions, thick gobs of delicious cheese and the obligatory crouton. Even more successful as starters were à la carte servings of vegetables. An order of roasted asparagus ($6) yielded thick, bright-green, al dente stalks, at once resilient to the bite and tender, with a delicious thyme-and-white-wine dressing. Brown-butter cauliflower ($5) took another one of my favorite vegetables and turned it into a delightful appetizer, with firm but tender texture, lively flavor and a rich brown-butter sauce.

In choosing main courses, I indulged my affinity for what I call peasant food—down-to-earth dishes with roots in particular regions of France that have become brasserie staples. Coq au vin ($19), a specialty of Burgundy, yielded a plump half-chicken in a rich red-wine sauce punctuated with cubes of carrots, pearl onions, garlic, mushrooms and smoky pork lardons that were both salty and sweet. Served on a bed of buttered egg noodles—the more traditional starch accompaniment of coq au vin is parsleyed potatoes, but I held my tongue—the dish proved the perfect antidote to a cold, wintry night.



Two of my other favorite brasserie dishes, cassoulet ($26) from France's southwest and choucroute ($24) from Alsace, also distinguished Bouchée's repertoire. The cassoulet featured a generous portion of good, firm flageolet beans, flavorful lamb sausage, a large duck hindquarter and braised bacon, served in a large, gondola-shaped casserole. Only the duck disappointed, lacking the classic fall-off-the-bone texture of true confit duck, perhaps roasted and added to the dish too late. No such problem afflicted the choucroute. Literally "baked cabbage," choucroute requires the better part of two days to prepare, first by washing shredded, brine-cured cabbage to mitigate its saltiness, then sautéing it with onions, carrots and butter to give it a rich, sweet, smoky flavor, inundating it with white wine and meat stock and bringing it to a boil, and then baking it in a moderate oven for several hours. While the cabbage is in the oven, various cuts of meat and sausage are added at appointed times and buried beneath the surface to achieve optimal texture. Bouchée's choucroute, a special on ight, featured a generous slice of sweet am, a slab of pleasantly salty bacon rich vith fat, a tender, flavorful hunk of braised ork with texture that verged on pulled ork, a generous link of kielbasa and per-ectly textured fingerling potatoes. It's not n easy dish to pull off in view of the dif-erent cooking times mandated for the arious ingredients, but the result at Bouchée was memorable. On the other and, skate wing in brown-butter sauce $24), a weekly special each Friday, didn't nake the grade with respect to texture; ne flesh was flaccid rather than firm. Still, ne delectable butter sauce almost rescued ne dish.

What came out of Bouchée's kitchen ad strong support from the restaurant's ncidentals. For example, artisanal bread upplied by a Framingham baker came in variety of forms: excellent hard-crusted rench baguettes and round rolls, and oarse-textured, slightly dark whole-rain slices with crispy crust. It served as ne perfect vehicle for mopping up the auces from all four main courses.

Bouchée's wine selection, and particu-rly its consumer-friendly price range, urprised and delighted me. Starting at ne lower end, a bottle of Les Mureaux Dumont Chinon ($21), a cabernet franc om the Loire Valley, combined pleasant uit with good acidity that stood up well o the food. Sparr riesling ($7.25 a glass) eatured Alsatian riesling's characteristic floral aroma, good acidity and full flavor that complemented the choucroute. Finally, I was seduced by an offering of 2002 Coume del Mas Schistes ($35), a grenache/syrah blend from the delightful Mediterranean town of Collioure, just north of the Spanish border in the French province of Roussillon. Unfortunately, it lacked sufficient acidity and structure, resulting in a somewhat soft, almost flabby character that didn't live up to my fond memory of the town and its wines.

Desserts included the usual suspects. Chocolate mousse cake ($8) satisfied my chocoholic urge, with light and dark chocolate mousse fringed with cake, and served in a poached-pear-and-port reduction. Profiteroles ($8) brought three puff-pastry balls filled with vanilla bean ice cream and drizzled with dark chocolate sauce (a touch on the scanty side).

Over three visits I found service at Bouchée first-rate. Servers kept water glasses filled, replaced tableware with alacrity and provided informed, friendly, professional and attentive service from beginning to end, making it clear that the restaurant's management had heeded and addressed early criticisms of its service. I had never dined in DuBarry, but its successor at this busy intersection is positioned to become a favored dining destination of both tourists and locals, like its Parisian exemplars. IB

Sundance Food Festival?

A celebrity chef among celebrities

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

During the Sundance Film Festival in tiny Park City, it's no big deal if you eat lunch at the same restaurant as Eddie Murphy or practically trip over Bono on the sidewalk, as I did. Celebrities and funky films are as much a part of the scenery as the Utah mountains, but there's no focus on events correspondingly culinary… or so it seems.

Out of the spotlight, "ChefDance"—10 nights of 10 chefs creating festive dinners for Hollywood players, corporate honchos and random celebrities—takes place privately in the center of Park City. And this year, Ken Oringer, chef/owner of Clio and Toro, was the sole Boston chef invited to participate.

Mr. Oringer goes to Sundance.

Did he see any films? "Unfortunately, no! I was way too busy," he says. He did, of course, see—and cook for, and even meet—a bunch of celebrities, including Samuel L. Jackson, Murphy, and Jessica Biel: "I got to meet her, and she was really nice," he recalls.

Oringer's four-course dinner included tuna ceviche with coconut, lemongrass and Thai chilies; celery root mousseline with black truffle fondue and bitter cocoa; and licorice-glazed shortribs with faro, dried black olives and butternut squash.

It's a far cry from the official snack food of Utah: lime jello. And dessert was a chocolate-hazelnut concoction that owed nothing to a beloved, old-fashioned Mormon recipe for dumplings called Lumpy Dick.

"Oh my God, that is hilarious!" says Oringer. "That would've been hilarious bar talk." At least as funny, and just as real, as Polygamy Porter…

It's All About Exposure

Most cookbooks get their publicity from newspaper and magazine reviews, but every now and then a bit of unexpected publicity can help land a book in the spotlight. If you haven't yet seen The 40-Year Old Virgin, watch the bookstore scene closely: you'll see a copy of The Fearless Chef by Tremont 647's Andy Husbands.

Alimentary, Dear Watson

Despite doing business in Boston for almost 20 years, Morton's the Steakhouse has always existed somewhat under the radar. Tucked away in a basement space, lacking signage, serving a predictable steakhous menu, it certainly had its proponents, bu wasn't a "must-try" kind of place.

After recent renovations that have cre ated a much more appealing bar area and cozy, just-elegant-enough dining room, it still the same Morton's whose Web sit carefully defines béarnaise sauce. A starte steakhouse, I thought. For goodness' sake they've only recently added a tuna tartar appetizer to the menu. And yet, a recen dinner was a reminder that what seem boring on paper—mashed potatoes, any one? Iceberg wedge salad?—can be trul delicious in a retro-comfort way that' elicit memories of your very first meal at steakhouse.

Olives' First Bar Menu

No longer is the bar at Olives i Charlestown merely a place to hush you growling stomach with a cocktail while yo wait for a table. Now there's an actual ba menu available whenever the restaurant open, with fare suitable for a light dinner, snack, or—if the dining room is exceptio ally busy—a first course. Almost every thing's under $10, and choices range fro wood-grilled lamb burger to a beef carpac cio tart, chicken croquette with blue chees fondue, and wood-fired pretzels with a tri of mustards. IB

WINE

Malbec Under the Microscope

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

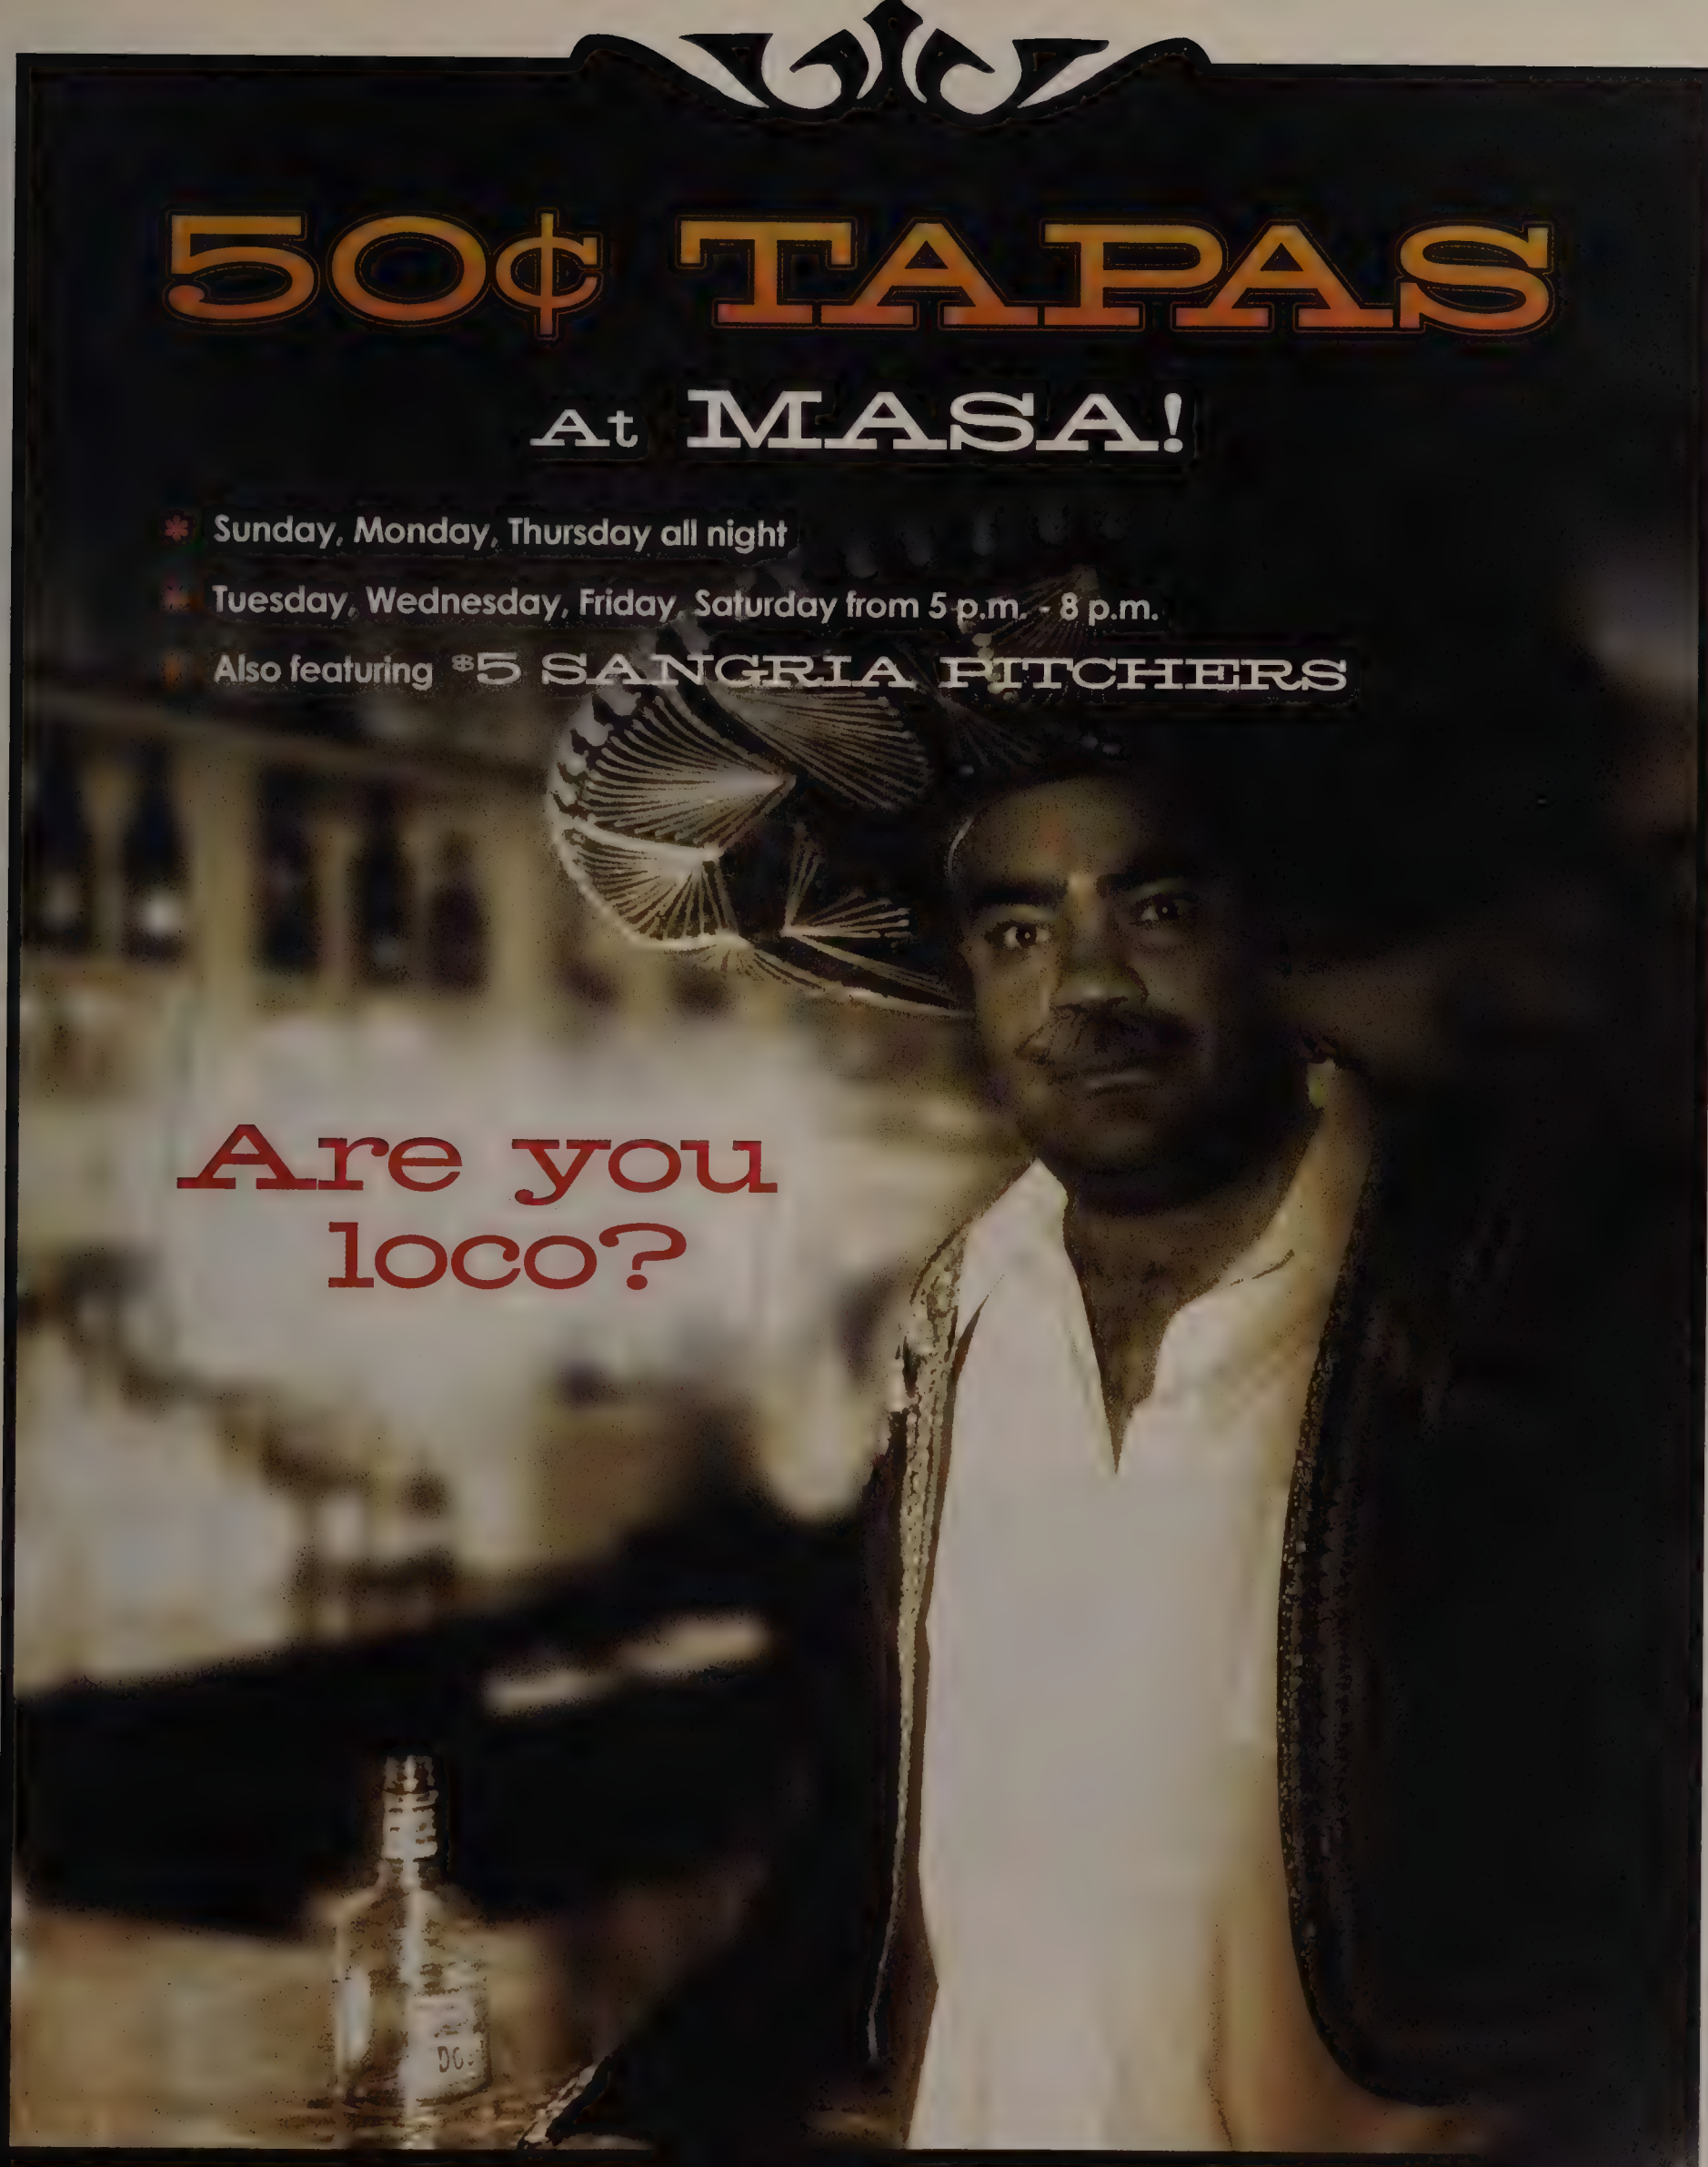
Eventually I may get malbec out of my system, but not until the Argentines decide to kill it by overproducing, diluting the flavor and pricing it out of the game. Fortunately, that isn't something I'll have to worry about for a while. If there's a star wine for this decade, the top candidate has to be this incredible, unique marriage of grape and terroir. Pick one—any bottle at random—and you'll see what I mean. The flavors are exciting, while the textures are layered and creamy. My only worry is that observant, enterprising wine businesspeople in fertile growing zones (such as California's Central Valley, the flatlands of Chile, La Mancha, Riverina and the Languedoc, to name a few) will soon begin planting the grape anywhere it will root, in a brazen effort to cash in on the coming groundswell of public enthusiasm. (California pinot grigio, anyone?) But relax—we're at least three to five years away from that scenario.

So, if it's not already clear, malbec is my unqualified choice for this year's red wine for all seasons, occasions and budgets. In fact, notes from my recent blind malbec tastings have been so full of superlatives and exclamation points, I recommend that people hunting for a dark, full-flavored red begin and end their search here, to the exclusion of virtually anything else. That said, some malbecs stand apart even from their elite brethren. Prices have crept up a bit the last few years, but most of these (including the "expensive" ones) are steals compared with the competition. Following are the best I've had, winners all. As usual, they appear in ascending order of preference.

Familia Zuccardi Malbec, Mendoza, 2004 ($16). Zuccardi offers a full range of varietals (including lower-priced wines under the Santa Julia label), and a malbec like this shows clearly why Argentina continues to increase its share of the American market, with 2006 sales up more than 10 percent. Ripe and intense, with a blend of black fruit and chocolate, the Zuccardi malbec has a lush, rich black-cherry flavor with accents of sweet, exotic spice, very soft tannins and an edgy fruit finish. Aged for a year in largely new French oak barrels, it's both a delicious quaffing wine and an excellent choice for savory winter stews.

Crios de Susana Balbo Malbec, Mendoza, 2005 ($14). This stunner has an earthy, smoky, leathery edge that follows through on the palate to add grace and intrigue to what's otherwise a gorgeous, velvety texture. It's the earlier-maturing, supposedly less concentrated wine in the Balbo lineup, originating from hand-harvested, own-rooted vines averaging 15 years old, but there's no lack of richness. This unfined, unfiltered malbec bursts out of the glass with flashy blackberry and cranberry flavors that are sensual, refined and rounded with hints of cocoa powder in the finish. It would be ideal with a juicy grilled steak.

Luigi Bosca Malbec Reserva, Lujan de Cuyo, 2003 ($16). From the northwestern corner of Mendoza, this century-old family property makes an incredibly ripe, violet-scented, gamey malbec that shows the intensity of its mountain fruit. Beautifully extracted with dark, clove-like, cinnamon-accented flavors, this wine is balanced with a firmer core of acidity than most Mendoza malbecs I've tasted, which lends a refreshing note to the sweet chocolate in the finish. Fully extracted and evenly mouth-coating, it's a fine choice for venison or herb-crusted lamb.



Achaval Ferrer Quimera, Mendoza, 2004 ($45). Okay, so this isn't exactly malbec. It's also got 30 percent merlot, 25 percent cabernet sauvignon and 10 percent cabernet franc—along with a ton of character. Quimera somehow snuck into the tastings and blew everybody away with its anise-like spice and brilliant, minerally black-fruit flavors. The aromatics showed a bit differently than those of the pure varietal malbecs, with a touch of bay and currant, but on the palate the wine fooled me. Clearly youthful, it was more expressive than most of the young "Bordeaux blends" I'm used to. Aged in a large percentage of new oak barrels, primarily French in origin, it displays signature bittersweet chocolate and mint notes that are blended harmoniously with the fruit. The mineral-like finish is lengthy and most satisfying. IB

Performing Arts: Defying Gravity

An ultra modern show deserves an ultra modern setting, so it's fitting that Brooklyn-based Streb Extreme Action dance company is bringing its latest performance to the new ICA building's theater. With glass walls that hang out over the harbor, the venue's easily the coolest performance space in the city, and the show, Streb vs. Gravity, promises innovative moves to match the ambiance. As a groundbreaking performance company that mixes dance, circus arts, extreme sports and Hollywood stunt work, Streb aims to show how the laws of nature and physics can be challenged through pure movement. Founder and artistic director Elizabeth Streb has called her choreography "the opposite of ballet"—her dancers fly, climb, fall and seem to suspend from midair in a mix of athleticism, grace, precision and guts. If you haven't checked out the ICA's waterfront digs yet, here's the perfect chance. Institute of Contemporary Art, 100 Northern Ave., Boston (617-478-3169). www.icaboston.org. Thu., 7:30 pm; Fri.-Sat., 8 pm; Sun., 2 pm. $27-$30. —LPK

Chefs create desserts with Girl Scout cookies for a Feb. 28 fundraiser.

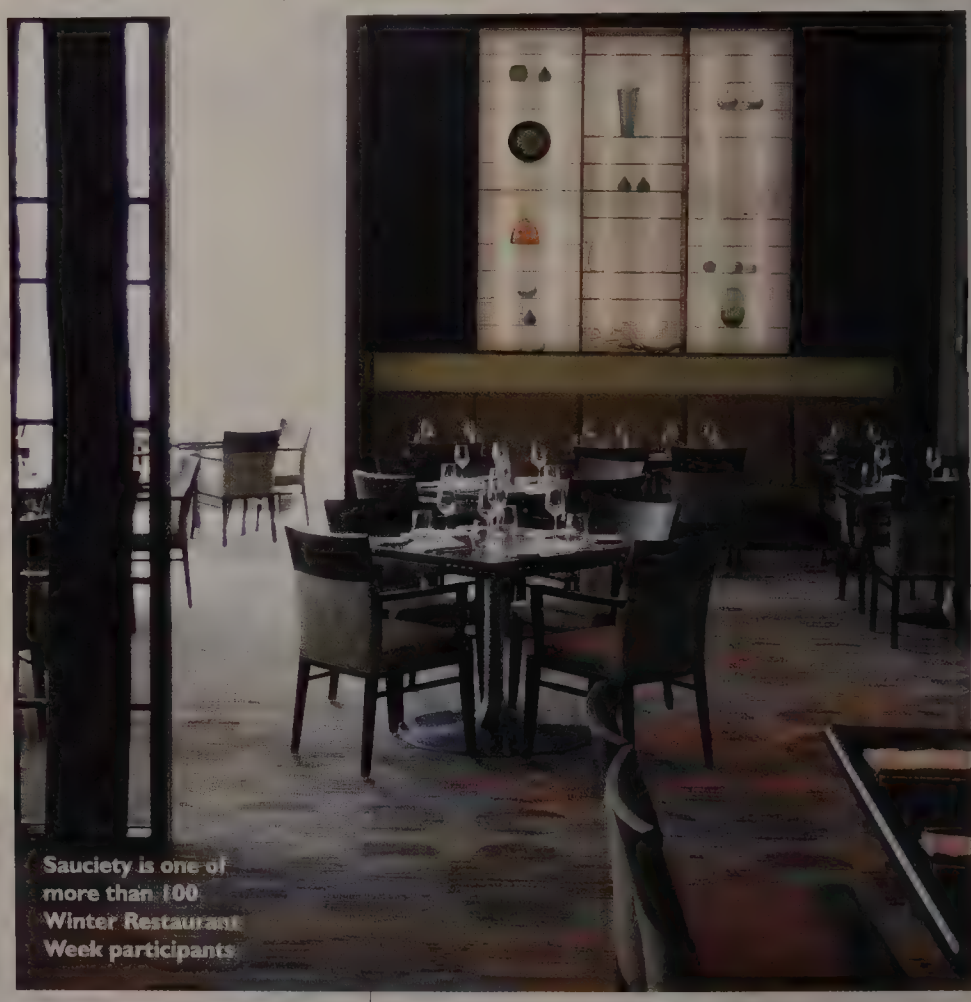
CityScope: Scout's Honor

This year, you don't have to wait for the girls in uniform to deliver your fix of Thin Mints, Tagalongs and Samoas. Some of the best pastry chefs in the city will do it for you at the Cookie Creations event at Hotel Commonwealth. In support of the Girl Scout's Patriots' Trail Council (which serves more than 20,000 girls in and around Boston), chefs from Conundrum, Great Bay, Radius, Sel de la Terre, the Metropolitan Club and the Langham Hotel whip up original desserts made with Girl Scout cookies. Judged by Jenny Johnson of TV Diner, Kelly Malone from Mix 98.5 and comedian Tony V, all entries are made for sampling. Cookies are also sold at the event, so now that the Scouts have gone sans trans-fats, the noshing is even guilt-free. Hotel Commonwealth, 500 Commonwealth Ave., Boston (617-482-1078). www.ptgirlscouts.org. 6-8 pm. $50. —LPK

FRI./FEB. 23



CityScope: Mardi Gras Made Easy

We'd love to escape the cold this February and get insane with our southern brethren down at Mardi Gras, but a $300 flight down to the Big Easy isn't exactly in the post-holiday budget. So this year we'll settle for the next best thing: Hurricane O'Reilly's Bourbon Street Blowout. The event features just about everything you expect from a pseudo–Mardi Gras celebration. There are giveaways and promotions, specialty drinks, king cakes, doubloons, a DJ and, of course, contests for the guest with the best costume and the partyer with the most beads. And best of all, what the event lacks in southern hospitality, it makes up for with Maxim girls. A group representing the mag will be in attendance, hanging with guests and who knows, maybe trying to earn themselves a few beads. Beat that, New Orleans. Hurricane O'Reilly's, 150 Canal St., Boston (781-444-7771). www.bostoneventguide.com. 8:30 pm-2 am. $10-$15. —RL

There are beads aplenty at the Bourbon Street Blowout.

TUE./FEB. 27

Music: Clipse Ahoy!

With overpublicized, high-profile rappers like 50 Cent, Jay-Z and the Game (not that we don't love those guys) dominating the hip-hop landscape, we understand if the Clipse [illegible]rently flying under your hip-hop radar. Here's a heads [illegible] discovered the Virginia-based duo—who'll take [illegible] to the Middle East—back in 1993, and [illegible] debut album, Lord Willin', which went gold [illegible]. When legal issues with their label, Jive, [illegible] the release of their sophomore album, the Clipse broke off by themselves, released a series of wildly successful underground mix tapes, and last November finally released Hell Hath No Fury. The long-awaited follow-up is produced entirely by Pharrell and topped out late last year at No. 2 on the Billboard hip-hop charts. But the charts don't even matter: The Clipse are the real deal. Give them a shot. Middle East, 472 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-492-9181). Doors open at 8 pm, $20-$22. 18+. —RL

SUN.-FRI./MARCH 4-9

Tastings: An Easy Prix-Fixe

While there's certainly no shortage of quality restaurants in our fair city, finding one that won't break the bank can be a challenge. Lucky for us, Boston's gearing up for another installment of restaurant week, during which a seemingly endless array of local establishments offer up three-course prix-fixe lunches and dinners for a very reasonable price. Winter Restaurant Week runs March 4–9, and participants include everyone from old favorites like Legal Sea Foods, Top of the Hub and Olives, to newcomers like Avila, Miel, Lineage and Vintage Lounge, and more than a hundred other Boston-area eateries. So loosen those belts, hop online and make some reservations now. www.bostonusa.com/restaurantweek. $20.07, lunch; $33.07, dinner. —RL

Celebrity Mole

Local boy Chris Cooper shines as a hard-nosed agent/traitor/pervert in Breach.

BY SEAN BURNS

"Take nothing personally" are the first words of wisdom offered to fledgling FBI agent Eric O'Neill (Ryan Phillippe) on his assignment to clerk for legendary hard-ass Robert Hanssen (Chris Cooper) at the start of Billy Ray's Breach.

It's good advice.

A gruff, imposing man of few, mostly unkind, words, Hanssen doesn't suffer fools gladly. Played by South Shore resident Cooper with a clenched jaw and crackerjack timing, the elder operative has been placed in charge of a new department called "information assurance," where he's expected to overhaul the Bureau's antiquated, sloppy intelligence storage systems and heighten security for the cyber-terror age.

Eager beaver O'Neill is cut down a peg or two by his new boss' brusque bons mots. Most days he's referred to as "Idiot," but if he does a good job, sometimes Eric's affectionately referred to as "Clerk." Robert Hanssen has simply been in the trenches too long and is too close to retirement to have any patience for office politics. The slow thaw of this icy working relationship is fodder for some unexpected comedy, and initially suggests that Breach might turn out to be something like The Devil Wears Prada for boys.

Except there's just one tiny catch: Hanssen is a traitor.

When he was finally arrested in March 2001, after 22 years of selling extremely sensitive top-secret information to the Russians, Hanssen's case represented the most enormous security breach in American history. This brilliant, covert criminal mastermind pulled the wool over so many people's eyes that, at one point during the FBI's decades-long mole-hunt, he was even placed in charge of finding himself.

It's a fascinating, often embarrassing chunk of recent history, brought to the big screen with surprising emotional texture and fine attention to detail by writer-director Billy Ray. Ray's previous picture, Shattered Glass, was an improbably suspenseful account of the Stephen Glass fabrication scandal at The New Republic. Not many filmmakers could make fact checking seem interesting, but Ray has a knack for crafting well-rounded, adult characters in corridors of power. White-collar intrigue suits him.

O'Neill only gradually begins to understand what he's gotten himself into, working Hanssen's front desk. Originally charged with mooning around the boss' questionable Internet postings—in addition to everything else, the guy also happened to be a sex pervert—the FBI's agent soon finds himself front and center in a [illegible] lingering resentment towards Ryan Phillippe, [illegible] his sexy pin-up career in teenybopper trash like Cruel Intentions, I Know What You Did Last Summer. But in recent years, the young actor has admirably shifted his focus, taking smaller roles in more interesting projects such as Robert Altman's Gosford Park and Clint Eastwood's Flags of Our Fathers. Breach should wipe out any doubts about Phillippe once and for all, as he delivers a fine, complicated performance, holding his own against several of the best vets in the business.

O'Neill's cocky gusto takes a serious beating once he discovers the depths of devotion his chosen career demands. Telling so many lies he can barely keep them straight himself, Eric's marriage crumbles and his nerves fray, while he tries frantically to remain one step ahead of the frighteningly suspicious Hanssen. A sad vision of his possible future looms large in Laura Linney's lonely, sleepless, workaholic senior agent. At one point she looks around her barely furnished apartment and says, "I've been at this job 20 years … I don't even have a cat."

But Breach is really Chris Cooper's show. Poker-faced and seething, the actor carries himself with an almost overwrought rigidity, signalling untold tempests behind his eyes. In Cooper's brilliantly physical interpretation of the character, Hanssen's abruptness and fanatical Catholicism appear to be the only things keeping untold demons in check. He's a volcano ready to blow.

So with a screenplay this sharp and such top-notch acting, why does Breach leave a slightly underwhelming aftertaste? The problem here, alas, also plagued Shattered Glass. For all his formidable gifts when it comes to character and performance, Ray doesn't seem to think in pictures.

Despite being shot by the great cinematographer Tak Fujumoto, Breach is aesthetically drab, taking place largely in fluorescent-lit corridors and sparse offices. The character blocking and juxtapositions are functional at best, sticking to a sort of made-for-cable movie standard that allows the actors to strut their stuff with very little distraction.

Again, there's nothing particularly wrong with how the picture has been put together, but certainly nothing up to the high standards of the other elements. It's easy for us to forget sometimes that the language of film isn't just actors acting and good storytelling. Movies also need to move, and unforgettable images are what separate the great ones from the merely good. IB

Because I Said So ★

This smutty, headache-inducing calamity wastes the formidable comedic talents of Diane Keaton, whipping her into a nattering, nails-on-a-blackboard frenzy as an overbearing single mother secretly auditioning suitors for her wallflower youngest (Mandy Moore). Keaton picks out a suave, jerky architect (Tom Everett Scott), while Moore discovers real happiness with a poorly dressed, down-on-his-luck guitar player (Gabriel Macht). One of those movies that would be over in 10 minutes if anybody on screen were capable of behaving like a rational adult, Because I Said So piles on so many noisy crossed signals, misunderstandings and nonsense that by the time Keaton's character loses her voice, it feels like a blessing. Lauren Graham and Piper Perabo round out the family, who loudly discuss all sorts of inappropriate sexual matters in crowded restaurants and shopping malls. Misleadingly marketed as a family comedy, this movie has more nonstop talk about orgasms and male genitalia than an entire season of Sex and the City. Yuck. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Blood Diamond ★★

Director Edward Zwick, who started out as a cocreator of the TV show thirtysomething before moving into bloated, preachy spectacles such as Courage Under Fire and The Last Samurai, makes action movies for guilty liberals. Trying to swaddle his relentless message-mongering in slick Hollywood clichés, Zwick often comes up with the worst of both worlds: big-budget adventures that grind to a halt every 10 minutes to lecture you. Blood Diamond should've been a corker, as the Sierra Leone diamond massacres of the late 1990s are rich with cinematic possibilities, and Leonardo DiCaprio delivers a surprisingly convincing, charismatic performance as a scummy smuggler taking advantage of a noble mine slave (Djimon Hounsou, who's played so many slaves in movies since starring in Amistad, he could probably perform Roots as a one-man show by now) to chase a pink diamond the size of a golf ball. Alas, Zwick squanders this promising setup with a devastating lack of forward momentum. Every scene runs at least twice as long as it needs to, and Zwick's pompous, self-consciously prestigious tone negates the story's gritty urgency. (At Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Breaking and Entering ★★

Best known for big-budget adaptations such as The English Patient and Cold Mountain, writer-director Anthony Minghella helms his first original screenplay since 1991's Truly, Madly, Deeply. Unfortunately, this convoluted tale of a brooding London architect (Jude Law) looking for love in all the wrong places is awash in so much overwrought literary symbolism you can be forgiven for assuming that it too was awkwardly culled from a best-seller. A jumble of mismatched relationships and droning speechifying about globalization and the modern class divide, Breaking and Entering finds Law torn between his icy Swedish girlfriend (Robin Wright Penn) and Juliette Binoche's battle-scarred Bosnian refugee. Obviously conceived with the best intentions, this handsomely mounted production feels soggy and predetermined. Minghella's characters are more like walking position papers, too self-conscious of what they're supposed to be representing in the movie's ideological chessboard. The only signs of life are found in the margins, with fine bit parts from Ray Winstone as a seen-it-all cop and The Departed's Vera Farmiga as a scene-stealing Russian prostitute. (At Harvard Square.)

Catch and Release ★½

Incompetent even by the lax standards of contemporary romantic comedies, screenwriter Susannah Grant's long-delayed directorial debut is a mystifying mishmash of sitcom contrivances and narrative dead-ends. Jennifer Garner cements her reputation as the poor man's Julia Roberts, offering precious little charisma as a young woman mourning the death of her fiancé. Garner's woefully underwritten character seems to have no friends, family, career, interests or even much of a personality, so she winds up moving into her old beau's apartment, bonding with his slobbo roommates (Sam Jaeger and a hammy Kevin Smith, reminding you why Silent Bob usually keeps his mouth shut) and making goo-goo eyes at the dearly departed's sleazy best friend (Deadwood sheriff Timothy Olyphant.) Reeking of re-edits and reshoots, Catch and Release flits around several story lines at once, as Grant seems unable to decide what her movie is supposed to be about. We're stuck with a lot of blandly attractive people staring blankly at one another in front of handsomely photographed Boulder locations. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Children of Men ★★★★
My pick for the best picture of 2006, Alfonso Cuarón's Children of Men is the kind of movie you only thought they didn't make anymore. A ruthless, angrily politicized piece of speculative science fiction that conveniently doubles as an edge-of-your-seat chase thriller, the film uses a dark vision of the future to critique the way we're living right now. As in the best sci-fi, the film feels more topically and emotionally keyed into our current, uneasy cultural moment than any present-tense tale possibly could. In a frighteningly believable future London after a worldwide infertility crisis has sent civilization into a violent tailspin, Clive Owen gives a magnificent old-school Humphrey Bogart performance, shepherding humanity's last hope through a bombed-out battleground and rediscovering depths of compassion and valor he forgot he even had. Cuarón and his brilliant cinematographer, Emmanuel Lubezki, have rewritten the rules of the action film, shooting exclusively with available light and in a succession of long, miraculously unbroken camera movements, thus lending a nerve-wracking real-time anxiety to the proceedings. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Days of Glory ★★★
One of this year's Academy Award nominees for Best Foreign Language Film, writer-director Rachid Bouchareb's affecting drama sticks largely to the tried-and-true genre conventions of the WWII platoon movie, but with one surprising, very important twist. Chronicling the long-marginalized efforts of France's North African regiments, the film seeks to honor soldiers who were treated as second-class citizens by the very homeland they put their lives on the line to defend. Denied rations or opportunities granted to the regular French army, the Arab battalions fought just as hard and bled just as badly, but with no recognition or reward. Bouchareb follows four young grunts of varying degrees of idealism through a somewhat generic, episodic trek during the fight for France's liberation. There are strong performances throughout, and during the battles the film makes the best of what appears to be a limited budget. What stays with you long after the closing credits is the film's outrage that brave young men died for an illusory notion of liberty, equality and fraternity. (At Kendall Square.)

Dreamgirls ★★½
All razzle-dazzle and very little soul, writer-director Bill Condon's breathlessly anticipated (and even more breathlessly paced) adaptation of the beloved Broadway musical frantically flings itself from one show-stopping number into another, never settling down long enough for us to become emotionally invested. A muckraking alternate history of Motown, Dreamgirls stars Beyoncé Knowles as a Diana Ross–ish diva bumped to the forefront of a Supremes-esque group by one Machiavellian Berry Gordy clone (Jamie Foxx, surprisingly inert here). Former American Idol contestant Jennifer Hudson belts out the show's signature song, "And I'm Telling You I'm Not Going," with an earth-shattering set of pipes, but her performance seems to shut down and go blank whenever she's not called upon to sing. The largely novice cast lacks the force of personality required to breathe life into these stock figures, save for an electrifying Eddie Murphy, who dominates every moment he's onscreen as a self-destructive James Brown/Marvin Gaye composite. Condon rushes headlong through the decades with such a bare minimum of characterization, this crowd-pleaser feels curiously empty. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Factory Girl ★
Arguably the first person to become famous for being famous, doomed junkie socialite and Andy Warhol muse Edie Sedgwick receives the fawning biopic treatment here, despite having done nothing of interest in her lifetime besides looking fabulous. A monument to vapidity, director George Hickenlooper's incoherent period piece recasts the Warhol factory scene as a muddled mess of Campbell's Soup cans and incessant name-dropping. Memento star Guy Pearce does a halfway-decent Warhol impression, but there's little for him to play besides the fey mannerisms and monotone bons mots we've seen a thousand times before. As Sedgwick, tabloid staple Sienna Miller throws herself into a role that doesn't really exist on the page. Bob Dylan's lawyers have been making a lot of noise in the press, with good reason. The singer, laughably portrayed here by Hayden Christensen (Star Wars' adenoidal Anakin), falls for Edie in a completely fictional love triangle that would come off as slanderous were it not so unintentionally funny. I guess the film's good practice for the inevitable Paris Hilton biography. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Letters From Iwo Jima ★★★★
Originally intended as a bookend to last October's flawed-but-worthy Flags of Our Fathers, Letters From Iwo Jima emerges as something far stronger, more unprecedented—perhaps even revolutionary. Only an American icon like Clint Eastwood could get away with making a WWII battle epic told from the losing side's point of view. (In Japanese with English subtitles, no less!) The filmmaking is spare and elegant. Tom Stern's washed-out cinematography drains the color from the frame, save for sharp stabs of crimson blood. The soundtrack offers a mournful piano dirge wherever lesser directors would opt for full orchestral bombast. But what'll stay with you for days afterward are those long, unbearable passages of time cramped in dark, frightening tunnels, racked by the distant thunder of explosions, as these frightened young men are left with nothing to contemplate but their own impending demise. Eastwood never once questions the necessity of this war; he seeks only to illuminate its cost, which in the hands of such a sensitive filmmaker becomes almost too horrible to bear. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Diane Keaton (left) and Mandy Moore, after a depressing day of acting in Because I Said So

Notes on a Scandal ★★★½
This deliciously catty cup of arsenic-laced tea gives Dame Judi Dench her meatiest role in ages, starring as an acerbic, secretly needy schoolmarm spinster with a crush on Cate Blanchett's willowy, in-over-her-head art teacher. Adapted by acid-tongued playwright Patrick Marber from a novel by Zoe Heller, Notes on a Scandal is a viciously hilarious British piss-take on our own Mary Kay Letourneau saga. After Dench spies Blanchett rolling around the art-studio floor with a 15-year-old soccer hooligan, the cutthroat wench tries spinning the situation to her benefit in this twisted tale of emotional blackmail. The story is told through Dench's unintentionally revealing diary entries, read in a pitch-perfect voice-over by the actress while the Phillip Glass score provides an ironically comic counterpoint. Director Richard Eyre (who worked with Dench in Iris) maintains a brisk pace with a minimum of fuss. Blanchett has never been so achingly vulnerable, and Dame Judi is simply a talons-bared delight. Very naughty, but a lot of fun. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Pan's Labyrinth ★★★½
This boldly original grown-up fairy tale from visionary writer-director Guillermo del Toro boasts images of both shocking horror and stark, elemental beauty. In the dark days just after the Spanish Civil War, troubled, unwanted young Ofelia (the extraordinary Ivana Baquero) copes with awful circumstances by escaping into an imaginary dreamland full of fairies and folk legends that subtly reflect and refract the trauma of her harsh, day-to-day experiences. In other words, imagine Alice suffering under Franco's regime, and falling down a politically and metaphorically freighted rabbit hole into a Wonderland of teeth-gnashing monsters. The underrated auteur behind such eye-popping treats as Blade 2 and Hellboy, del Toro has a distinctive personal vision and a unique visual signature, qualities that for years have gone unheralded, thanks to the intelligentsia's snooty disdain for the horror genre. Besides offering sights that'll linger long in your dreams, Pan's Labyrinth includes a memorably terrifying performance from With a Friend Like Harry's Sergi Lopez, and a warm, heroic turn from Y Tu Mamá También star Maribel Verdu. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

The Pursuit of Happyness ★★★
Italian director Gabriele Muccino's first English-language film is a tough-minded piece of work about a family slipping into poverty during Ronald Reagan's go-go '80s. Will Smith finally sheds his arrogance, graying his hair and underplaying nicely as the real-life Horatio Alger Chris Gardner, a sly go-getter who, despite having only a high school education and no experience, shot to the top of a competitive internship program at Dean Witter. But Chris never mentioned to his trading-floor colleagues that he also happened to be homeless, bouncing from train-station restroom to overcrowded shelter with his son (played by Jaden Christopher Syre Smith, the actor's own kid). It's startling to see Chris and his boy living hand-to-mouth, and Steve Conrad's screenplay doesn't skimp on their desperation. Muccino downplays the tale's inherent sap factor, and the tears he finally jerks are hard-earned indeed. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Screamers ★★½
Clumsy but noble, Carla Garapedian's documentary makes a somewhat convincing case that the continuing refusal to acknowledge the 1915 Armenian genocide by many governments, including our own, only serves to encourage similar practices of ethnic cleansing in Bosnia, Rwanda and Darfur. Alt-metal rockers System of a Down have devoted themselves to raising awareness, and the film is framed around their efforts to remind Americans that those who don't learn from history are doomed to repeat it. The most fascinating footage is first-hand testimony from lead singer Ser Tankian's grandfather, now 96 years old, detailing the unspeakable atrocities his family suffered at the hand of the Ottoman Turks. Garapedian argues that big business and strategic alliances keep the historical record muddled, and the most infuriating segments of Screamers find government officials throughout the years performing all sorts of verbal gymnastics in order to avoid saying the word "genocide." There's meaty food for thought here, as well as an undeniable urgency that's slightly tempered by far too much screen time devoted to System of a Down's monotonous concert performances. (At Fresh Pond.)

Smokin' Aces ★½
Feeling like the worst movie of 1998, Narc writer-director Joe Carnahan's unfunny bloodbath might work for some viewers as nostalgia for that dark era of witless Tarantino knockoffs like Mad Dog Time, The Boondock Saints and Things to Do in Denver When You're Dead, but for the rest of us it's an unwelcome reminder of what a drag it was to watch indie movies in the wake of Pulp Fiction. Stretching True Romance's climactic hotel room massacre out to a full two hours, this empty-headed festival of macho posturing sends dozens of strenuously quirky hit men out to whack Jeremy Piven's coked-up stool pigeon. It's a lot of washed-up actors like Ben Affleck, Ray Liotta and Andy García shouting obscenities and overacting with their neck muscles, and Carnahan edits like he's got ants in his pants. Confused and tone-deaf, the movie expects us to find some deaths tragic but others side-splittingly hysterical. It's tough to figure out when you're supposed to be weeping for when a chainsaw murder is played for cheap comic laughs. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Venus ★★★½
Stubborn, foppish legend of stage and screen Peter O'Toole has found his ideal swan song in Venus. Roger Michell's big-hearted and filthy-minded examination of one fussy lion who isn't quite ready fo winter. O'Toole gives an extraordinary performance as a worn-out actor who becomes erotically fixated on Jodie Whittaker's vulgar, beer-bellied, 20-something nursemaid. Their fumbling parody of a courtship is fascinating because of all the pat resolutions and expected homilies that Michell and screenwriter Hanif Kurieshi so studiously avoid. Feeling at times like a rebuttal to the polished cutesiness of those Grumpy Old Men movies, Venus has few romantic notions about growing old. The movie is packed with prostate exams, catheters and toenail clippings, always forcefully upfront about the fact that the aging process often consists of one damned indignity after another. An early sight gag finds the actor springing from a television studio deathbed, firing up a smoke and happily, loudly cursing. It's a blissful little moment that somehow encapsulates this curiously affecting film: lewd misbehavior as a life force. (At Harvard Square and West Newton.)

Volver ★★★

The title translates as "To Return," a concept that echoes in several sneaky ways throughout Pedro Almodóvar's relaxed, casually complex movie. Penélope Cruz has never been better than she is in this twisted homage to Spanish telenovelas and Douglas Sirk melodramas. The plot is too complex and upside-down to even begin trying to explain, but what you'll be most struck by is Almodóvar's sheer, unabashed adoration of women. The movie has a rich, feminine glow to it. Almost all of the scenes take place while Pedro's women are preparing food, styling each other's hair or somehow nurturing one another. There's something almost primal about Almodóvar's vision of females as healers and caregivers—their community's life force. Though a bit overplotted and overlong, this is a very sweet film; a love letter to the kindness and resilience of ladies everywhere. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Fruit Salad

Of Montreal's Kevin Barnes exorcises his inner demons—and dredges up a host of funky confections in the process.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Kevin Barnes was headed for a breakthrough—and a breakdown. His eccentric band, Of Montreal, was starting to play larger clubs after nearly a decade in the indie-rock trenches. He was about to become a father, temporarily living in his wife's hometown of Oslo to take advantage of Norwegian health benefits for artists, and he was holed up in a bedroom, creating what would become Of Montreal's colorful new CD, Hissing Fauna, Are You the Destroyer?

Kevin Barnes (center) relies on his bandmates to bring his colorful visions to life onstage.

But that isolated environment—and an escalating case of depression—nearly destroyed him. "I got to this point where I really wanted to die," says Barnes, 32. "I wasn't writing suicide notes, but I wished something would kill me, like a bus would hit me or a giant cannonball would fall from the sky. I couldn't really tolerate the way I was feeling. I'd had a lot of anxiety problems before, but never like this. Every moment of the day was just a nightmare.

"It was the worst, or at least the most extreme, year of my life," says Barnes. He found little relief in returning to Of Montreal's base of Athens, Ga., with his wife and baby daughter. "I got on medication and everything smoothed out. Then I became detached and my relationship broke up."

He later reconciled with his wife, inspiring a more upbeat end- to Hissing Fauna than the highly autobiographical (and -logical) arc of troubles that launched the project.

- music, you can transform disasters into something more - beautiful," Barnes says from a stop on the tour that will - his band to Avalon on March 11. "It was like it used to be, escaping into music as a form of therapy or meditation, putting on the headphones, working by myself and blocking out the world."

Ebullient beats and synthesizer swells lift the first half of the CD, which he recorded with a laptop, microphone and keyboard in that Oslo bedroom, finding contrasts in such lyrics as "I spent the winter on the verge of a total breakdown while living in Norway" and "I'm in a crisis, I need help, come on mood shift, shift back to good again."

But after "The Past Is a Grotesque Animal," a 12-minute centerpiece in which he wears his heart on his sleeve over a Krautrock-like pulse that seemingly never ends, Barnes gets lighthearted and even funky in "Faberge Falls for Shuggie" and the falsetto-tinged "Labyrinthian Pomp"—tracks that replaced darker entries after he reunited with his family.

"I go on tour to support a record and I don't know that I want to live in this super-dark world for another year," he says. "I can include these songs that are a lot more fun, like 'Faberge Falls.' It's probably my favorite song ever to perform, because it's so Prince-y. It's so sexy."

The slinky glam-funk of Prince is a more recent influence on Barnes' music, along with Brian Eno, Afrobeat, Jamaican rock steady and American soul. That shift was also evident in his electro-pop stylings on 2005's The Sunlandic Twins, which he also made as a virtual one-man band in Oslo and Athens. But Hissing Fauna is a more reckless distillation.

It's also a stretch from Of Montreal's roots in the Elephant Six, a loose collective of Athens bands that drew inspiration from vintage psychedelic pop. "I just got so bored with the '60s thing," Barnes says. "You can only listen to [the Kinks'] Village Green Preservation Society so many times before you want to do something new.

"In the past, I used to do everything on acoustic guitar or piano, and I had the whole song basically done before I'd start recording," he adds of his synthetic solo approach. "This time, I just experimented and fooled around."

To complete Hissing Fauna, Barnes channeled his inner soulman through a songwriting alter-ego he calls Georgie Fruit. "He's totally free, totally liberated," Barnes says. "He's my concept of what it would be like to be a 46-year-old black man who was involved in music. Did I mention he was in this band called Arousal in the late '70s?"

As for Barnes' band, he still has guitarist Bryan Poole, bassist Matt Dawson, drummer Jamey Huggins and keyboardist Dottie Alexander to bring his visions to life onstage. "The live band is a totally extreme version of what I had in mind when I was recording," he says, "as far as adding this other element, the theatricality, the makeup, the outfits and the attitude."

Screens also project animation by his brother David (who designed the new CD's kaleidoscopic cover) and slides from a Baptist church. "They're strangely inspirational, but out of context," Barnes says, "like a marathon or hanging out with grandma."

Again, it's a long way from the indie-rock of old. "I have more in common with Justin Timberlake than Wolf Parade as far as the show I want to put on," Barnes says. "I'd like to have dancers and crazy lights." IB plays March 11 at Avalon.

WHAT MAKES A GREAT BARTENDER?

Is it sheer Cocktail-esque flair with the bottles, an encyclopedic knowledge of potent potions, a simple willingness to go through the credit-card routine for someone with a two-drink tab? We want to know. Pick up a pen and tell us who makes the mixes, pours the pints and sets up the shots that shake and stir your unflagging adoration. Show your appreciation by voting to immortalize your favorite mixologist in our next Beloved Bartenders issue.

IMPROPER sightings

UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Kentucky congressman John Yarmuth was once insanely close to having a town on the Cape named after him, but he came up a letter short in the end.

Rob Ansel was at Dracula's Castle in Romania, which sounds great if, you know, you're into the whole garlic-necklace-and-blood-sucking thing.

After Edwina Kluender and Brian Adams posed for this shot in Shanghai, Adams was heard saying, "No! For the last time, I'm not that Bryan Adams. His name is spelled with a y, not an i! God, I hate Bryan Adams!"

Loi Ann Resurreccion visited the Top of the World Restaurant in Vegas. It's the third-tallest building in the U.S., behind the Sears Tower and Queen Latifah.

Maureen Foley, Helen Todisco and Lynn Bushee wrote that we'd never publish a photo of three "old chicks" in Prague. Lucky for them that's only partly true; we have no problem publishing photos of "smoking hot old chicks."

Yvette Clarke is a U.S. representative from Brooklyn, N.Y., but she's also known in some circles as the Queen of Kings (County).

Romeo, Romeo

To my kindred: It was cold. We were outside Tir na Nog. I had no gloves or scarf, and you helped me fasten up my coat. That was sweet. You said you'd be back there Saturday (filming?), but I had the sniffles. Will you be there again before they close?
—Joan (gorgonzola@gmail.com)

Slice of Reality

To the person who wrote about the unfriendly bartender at Pizzeria Regina: Are you kidding me? The whole experience of Pizzeria Regina in the North End is the atmosphere and eccentric personalities of their staff. You indicate that you go to Regina's on Friday nights—possibly the busiest night of the week for any pizza joint—and you're wondering why the bartender isn't friendly? Did you ever stop to think about the number of people that are piling in and out of an establishment that was built in 1926? And those work conditions the staff has to endure: cramped areas; noisy and sometimes drunk patrons; waitresses ordering drinks for their tables; etc. If you want friendliness, head to your local Friday's with the youngsters from suburbia. I think you may have other issues to deal with if getting unfriendly service from a pizza joint ruins your whole night.
—Authentic Authority

McPervert With Cheese

To the guy I saw at South Station around 10:15 pm on Jan. 31: I wanted to say thanks for the best laugh I had all week. It was smooth how you approached the cutest young brunette sitting by herself. You asked if anyone was sitting with her even though there were clearly empty tables all around. You appeared to be old enough to be her father; I guess that's why you showed such concern and pulled a cheeseburger out of your McDonald's bag and placed it next to her. (What's the matter? You couldn't afford a Big Mac?) She looked as if she was getting annoyed as you continued to ask if she ate that night. I was only sorry they called my train and I missed the outcome of your attempt. No wonder the women of Boston have such unfriendly attitudes toward strangers.
—Franklin Guy

Four More Years!

Darling: I can't believe I've been your wife for four years now. You're an amazing man who continues to teach me more about true love and the important things in life: sunsets, the moonrise, warm clothes and walks with the pup. I am truly blessed. I never knew my heart could be so full. You are a wonderful dad, a delicious love and my best friend. Thank you for making all my dreams come true. I hope when your head hits the pillow each night you're as grateful as I am for this love affair we've created. Your generous heart, your huge smile and your fantastic laugh are the best parts of each day. I'm lovin' this adventure with you! I look forward to more adventures, my favorite, my love, my husband, my home. Happy anniversary, L.G. I love you.
—Y.E.L.W.

Warning: Hitched and Lecherous

To the property manager on State Street with the Chinese symbol tattoo on his neck: You're married. Please remember that the next time you try to pick girls up on the street. You took me on a fantastic lunch date at Clarke's and promised me many dates to come, only to never call. When I saw you two months later on State Street clearly wearing a wedding band, you not only tried to lie about it but also had the nerve to ask me for my number again after claiming you lost it. Did you lose it again, or did your wife find it? Ladies, don't be fooled by his good looks, charming ways, sweet kisses and ability to clear the streets. He's taken. Be glad he isn't yours.

Improper CONnection

To one lovely lady: Today, a figment of my imagination has become my reality. You left me speechless. Not that I lack the words, but how is a man like myself ever to express the heavens I've found to exist in you? As you know, I'm in a situation where I am forever looked down upon. But finding a friend with a heart of gold—one who sees the beauty inside of me—is rare indeed. After reading what you had to say, I will assure you that good things are to follow. Like you, I enjoy travelling and poems. There's nothing spectacular about me, but I am most certainly worth the chance to make you smile. With that, I'll be awaiting your correspondence.

rockie horoscope

FEBRUARY 21 – MARCH 6, 2007 BY ROCKIE GARDINER

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Why not make that last attempt to snag a client's attention before magnetic Venus leaves your sign on Ash Wednesday? After that, you'll no longer be the answer to a needy but powerful person's prayers. While the sun passes through Pisces, you'll be too busy celebrating—not only your birthday, but each of the gifts you were born with. Thanks to productive Saturn's polarity with your aesthetic Neptune ruler, those talents could manifest (and be valued) in what once upon a time, before MTV, was called the real world.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Bad timing or a blessing in disguise? Venus, planet of love, beauty and pleasure, enters Aries on Ash Wednesday. Will the goodies the goddess offers offset the rigors of Lent, or will self-control triumph over self-indulgence? In the middle of St. Patrick's Day festivities, Venus' visit comes to an end, leaving you high but not necessarily dry. You'll have only 24 days to become a more attractive, a more sociable Lamb. As far as wealthier, those benefits start to accrue after retrograde Mercury turns direct on March 7.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Valentine's Day may have been about expressing affection, but this year's President's Day is more about passion. Who is doing what with whom, and why? This type of questioning tends to come up whenever your romantic Venus ruler succumbs to Pluto's powers of persuasion. It may be hard to resist the pull, so why not spend the holiday weekend (and Mardi Gras) checking out Pluto's dark side and seeing where you fit in it? Artists and wannabes could wind up in the spotlight for exceeding the public's expectations.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

An interesting dilemma may arise when indomitable Pluto in your marriage house challenges artistic Venus in your career zone. Could an influential woman interfere with your plans for a midwinter break? Will you be asked to cut your holiday short and return to work? And will you figure out a solution that satisfies all parties concerned when the sun meets up with your retrograde Mercury ruler and makes the Twins appear smarter than the rest of us? Well, it may not be those Virgins. Opportunities abound once Mercury faces forward on March 7.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

The Moon Child should put personal business in order before the first eclipse of the year in early March. How long can your celebration of the Chinese New Year, which began with the new moon on Feb. 18, go on? So what if this, the Year of the Golden Boar, is predicted to be the most auspicious of the past 600 years? You already know that the 21st is China's century and, as more planets fill your Pisces house of foreign travel, more opportunities will arise, especially around the sun's meeting with innovative Uranus.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

No one has adequately explained to me the strange attraction between Lions and Fish. While your sun ruler travels through Pisces, perhaps you can figure out what you like about this elusive water sign and its wellspring of emotional turmoil. A moment of clarity occurs when the sun meets clever Mercury around March 22, but those insights may fall by the wayside until Mercury turns direct. Until then, there's an infusion of exciting times coming while Venus visits adventurous Aries, another high-spirited fire sign.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

Look for a variation of the Gemini dilemma. Despite a challenge from one of your significant others, domineering Pluto insists that you stand firm about a family matter. Affable Venus in your Pisces marriage house usually brings good times and good loving, so you're liable to be grateful and predisposed to giving in to your partner's request. However, since your Mercury ruler is still retrograde, you shouldn't count on anything going according to plan. Venus will forgive and forget when it gets to Aries; the relatives won't.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

Enough of the martyr mode! Give thanks that your Venus ruler leaves self-sacrificing Pisces on March 21 for the single-minded, self-centeredness of Aries. This is the break you need, and while the goddess dances through the sign of your cosmic mate, the pleasure you deserve. But before the fun can start, you may have to convince a neighbor or sibling to take over some of the duties you've so dutifully fulfilled. As far as assuming some of the expense, probably not. Leave that to the man of the house.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

Fat Tuesday and Ash Wednesday, both the ridiculous and the sublime, are informed this year by the compelling connection between your passionate Pluto coruler and vivacious Venus. Don't bother trying to elude the ties that bind you to the person you're currently attracted to. That's one of the nicer aspects of these intense Venus-Pluto liaisons; while Pluto barely budges, Venus's annual trip through all 12 signs brings an interesting assortment of desirable people into your life. Right now, a costly pleasure, but not for long.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

As if it were a feeding frenzy, people of the Pisces persuasion tend to show up whenever the sun enters the sign of the Fish. How to deal with their tales of woe (I rarely hear about the happy times) is something each of us Seers has to work out for ourselves. Since our magnanimous, expansive Jupiter ruler is in Sag this year, I assume we'll be listening to bigger fish stories than usual. This is what happens when you're reputed to give good advice. Here's mine: Gear your words to the spiritual and artistic planes. Reality sucks.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

For some, the polarity between imaginative Neptune and your pragmatic Saturn ruler can be an annoyance that keeps you from completing what you're supposed to. For others, the opposition may be a welcome distraction, an opportunity to let your mind wander through the poppy fields. It all depends on what you need to do. Since their opposition is a rare enough occurrence, why not slow down so you can appreciate the full effect? Besides, with mistake-prone Mercury retrograde until March 7, it's better to be safe than sorry.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

If you've been waiting to get sufficiently motivated, wait no longer. For the first time in two years, energetic Mars comes to your rescue when it enters Aquarius for the Oscars. The red planet will stick around until Good Friday, so if you need a nip, a tuck or dental surgery, schedule it ASAP. You might have a better idea of what you should spend your money on after the sun merges with retrograde Mercury and offers an opportunity to reassess your assets. We all know a change is in the works; the only question is, when?

BRUNCH

CLERY'S 113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874. www.irishconnection.com. Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar earned the title of the 2002-2006 Best of Boston's Best Neighborhood bar, serving more than 400 regulars. Enjoy one of the 16 draught beers either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle weather of New England turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

DILLON'S 955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818. www.irishconnection.com. Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. Accented by dark bamboo woodwork and large banana fans, it's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Relax with a Blueberry Pie Martini in the warmly lit lounge or an ice cold beer on the patio. Then retire to the dining room where you can browse the eclectic Continental menu featuring a variety of items, including pan seared tuna salad, steak sirloin, shrimp tempura, Gourmet prosciutto pizza and more. Also featuring a tapas bar, perfect for sharing, with tasty bites such as Fried Aubergine, Chicken & Chorizo, and Saigon Scallops. Dillon's is open seven days a week from 10:00 a.m. – 2 a.m., serving brunch on Saturday and Sunday beginning at 10:00 a.m.

KENNEDY'S MIDTOWN 42 Province Street, Boston, 617-426-3333 www.kennedysmidtown. com. Ideally situated in Boston's Midtown, Kennedy's is located between Downtown Crossing and the Boston Common; Just steps from Beacon Hill and The Freedom Trail. One of Boston's best kept secrets, Kennedy's menu boast prime aged steaks, seafood,assorted pub fare, and daily creations. Open 7 days a week, brunch served Saturdays and Sundays, and lively piano bar. Call us for that special function or event.

ROGGIE'S 356 Chestnut Hill Avenue, Cleveland Circle, Brighton, 617-566-1880, www.roggies. com. Shake off the morning blues with Brunch at Roggie's! Brunch is served Saturday and Sunday. Live bands, open mic on Tuesdays, karaoke on Wednesday, and DJ on weekends. Breakfast is also served all day, lunch, and dinner served seven days a week.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP 130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331; SUNSET CANTINA, 916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston 617-731-8646. "Beer's not just for breakfast anymore." At the Sunset Super Sunday Brewers Brunch, try our thick-cut French toast, potato skins and eggs, eggs benny, crispy quesadillas or our All You Can Eat Brunch Taco Bar, including a free Sunday paper and your first beery mary or mimosa. Full menu also available. 112 taps, 300+microbrews.

LAST SCENE HERE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

At Centerfolds, top row: Mark LaMorrie and Amy Finsilver. Bottom row: Alan Rouleau, Caitlin Joyce and Paul Downey; Rachel Lee and Joe Quattrocchi

NOW THAT'S WHAT WE CALL A RELAXED DRESS CODE...

It's hard to believe it's been five years since Centerfolds opened, but time flies when you're throwing dollar bills at women, especially when they're gyrating on a stage, contorting around a pole and showing off parts of their anatomy that only their gynecologists normally get to see (at least in such vivid, closeup detail).

Although we're still undecided about food being served at a strip joint (an informal polling that night elicited reactions ranging from mild queasiness to "Let's eat!"), the gentleman's club hosted an appropriately lavish party to mark the auspicious occasion.

Helping to celebrate were such regulars and rogues as custom tailor to the stars Alan Rouleau, Bentley peddler Paul Downey, hunky male model and personal trainer Mark LaMorrie, brunette bombshell Amy Finsilver, dashing architect Ken Paolini, the club's owner Laz Askitis, rascally restaurateur Joe Quattrocchi, film producer Gregg Nourjian, the sparkly Caitlin Joyce, a 20-something hottie who was there to celebrate her birthday by whooping and hollering from a front-row seat, and one well-known boy billionaire who asked not to be named because, as he put it, "My mother doesn't know what kind of son she raised, and I'm not sure I want her to find out."

Not surprisingly, many of the evening's most amusing remarks involved the dancers, like the guy who exclaimed, "She just did an inverted iron cross!" as if he was offering live commentary at the Olympics.

Then there were the amusing exchanges overheard by the bar, which included:

"He got gastroenteritis in Karachi."

"Yeah, but think of how much weight he must've lost."

And another man who said, "This place is one of the three vices I allow myself," to which someone snorted and replied, "So what are the other two?"

DOUBLE SCOTCH, TRIPLE SALCHOW, WHAT'S THE DIFFERENCE?

On ice is generally how we like things when alcohol is involved, so we were pleased when the cleverly named Kitchen Cabinet—a group that supports the Greater Boston Food Bank—hosted an evening called On Ice, which involved cocktails, hors d'oeuvres and ice skating at the Charles Hotel.

Present and accounted for were such bright young things as J.B. and Tiffany Dowd, BSO babe Nina Jung, advertising bigwig John Wolfarth, cochair Suzanne Daley, diamond dealer Nidhi Handa, sizzling spa owner (and former Miss Massachusetts) Maria Lekkakos, current Miss Massachusetts Despina Delios, lovable shutterbug Cheryl Richards, financial titan Michael Forrester, Red Sox front office babe Colleen Reilly, marketing maven Joan Jolley, and B.U. School of Medicine's Angela Jefferson, who told one guest that she was an assistant professor of neurology, to which he responded, "Oh, I'm neurotic. Does that mean I should come see you?"

Despite the skating rink being open to all, guests seemed intent on staying indoors and socializing, although there was plenty of talk about the appropriate athletic attire, like the gay man who said, "As I was getting dressed, I thought, 'What would Brian Boitano do?'" and the woman who exclaimed to her friend, "Oh, I see you're wearing your skating diamonds!"

All in all, a thoroughly delightful evening, even if the only ice most of the guests got near was floating in their drinks.

WHERE'S DON JOHNSON WHEN YOU NEED HIM?

As far as epic parties are concerned, the eighth annual Big Night to benefit Big Brothers of Massachusetts Bay, held at the Boston Convention and Exhibition Center, is virtually impossible to top.

In addition to an '80s prom theme that had otherwise dignified socialites and high-profile types wearing hideous big-shouldered gowns and blue tuxedos with mullet wigs, there was a reception that featured a pep rally and bonfire (complete with cheerleaders and marching band), a four-course dinner prepared by celebrity chefs Angela and Seth Raynor of the Pearl, Michael Schlow of Radius and Via Matta, Ming Tsai of Blue Ginger, and Pino Maffeo of Restaurant L, and to top it all off, entertainment and dancing to '80s megabands Hall and Oates and the Bangles.

Cochaired by überlawyer Joe Ayoub and Tudor Investments' Jim Pallotta (who waxed himself from head to toe and came in drag, looking like an extra from Dynasty), the evening attracted the likes of filmmaker Bobby Farrelly, fashion plate Kristina Hare Lyons (wearing a truly hideous knit dress she wore to the Oscars sometime in the '80s), 24-hour party people Matthew and Lori Sidman and Jonathan and Maggie Seelig, philanthropists Marjorie Clapprood and Chris Spinazzola (looking cheesier than a bag of Goldfish), Back Bay fun couple Dan and Shoshanna Farb, the eternally gorgeous Beth Kurtin, babe-alicious hedge fund executive Anna Ponder, unusually brave out-of-towner Steve Eyl (sporting the hot-pants style basketball shorts popular in the '80s), and one woman who whined, "My shoulders look like a linebacker's and my hair's got a hard-on."

In short, everyone looked perfectly awful (which was precisely the point) while simultaneously having an amazing time and incidentally serving as a reminder of why nostalgia-driven fashion designers should stop mining the past once they get to about 1979. IB fection has its price.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

FROM THE EDITOR

THE LATE SHOW

Some of our readers remember the Boston of 30 years ago, when the area around lower Washington Street was known as the Combat Zone and the nightlife there consisted mainly of strip clubs, like the infamous Naked I. A lot has changed since then, and for this our annual Nightlife issue, we thought it'd be fun to investigate what some of today's popular nightspots used to be. It's a trip down memory lane for lifelong Bostonians, and an eye-opener for the newbies who've lived here for less than a couple of decades.

Nostalgia aside, this issue is packed with info on what to do during the nighttime hours in the here and now. We tell you where to find cutting-edge DJs and decent after-midnight eats, no matter what you're hungry for. And we introduce you to the worlds of burlesque and cabaret—far from the typical night out.

YOU CRUISE, YOU LOSE

In regard to Ezra's column "Loser Cruiser" (Feb. 21), fake a medical emergency and get your money back. I just came from my first and last cruise. It was one of the worst vacations ever. The ship was a combination floating mini-mall/trailer park/ash tray. If you like cafeteria-quality food, cattle herding, bingo, bad wine, tacky everything and diarrhea, go for it. If the weather sucks, you're screwed (and not the good kind). Escape now; I'm dead serious.

MISSED CONGENIALITY

In "Last Scene Here" (Feb. 21), you ran a photo of Despina Delios and identified her as Miss Massachusetts. Actually she's Miss Massachusetts USA, not to be confused with Miss Massachusetts, which is part of the Miss America system. Miss Massachusetts USA is part of the Miss USA system, owned by Donald Trump, who also owns Miss Universe and Miss Teen USA.

THE WORD

A Quiet Revolution

The fanfare-free opening heralds no momentous occasion. The unassuming space tucked into a tiny alley signals simple neighborhood eatery through and through. But make no mistake: What Tim and Nancy Cushman's new Leather District restaurant, O Ya, represents is nothing short of a culinary revolution. Namely, the arrival in Boston of a complete Japanese cuisine.

Not that our city has any shortage of sophisticated raw-fish offerings. Years ago, Ken Oringer jettisoned the sushi-lite likes of California and Alaska rolls from the menu at Uni, and the Cushmans follow suit at O Ya, renouncing mundane maki in favor of creative takes on nigiri sushi (that's the raw fish on small mounds of rice) and sashimi (no rice). Having honed his skills under such sushi masters as Masa Takayama protégé Hiro Urasawa, Chef Tim has the chops to pull off novel nigiri like hamachi with banana-pepper mousse ($7) and spot prawn with garlic butter, homemade white soy sauce and preserved yuzu ($12), as well as inspired sashimi plates like kin madai (big-eye red snapper) with white-soy ginger, myoga (ginger buds) and lemon oil ($16) and diver scallop with sage tempura, olive oil "bubbles" and Meyer lemon ($15). With these dishes, among others (the menu changes daily), O Ya joins the elite ranks of Uni and Oishii Boston at the forefront of sushi artistry.

Where O Ya steps away from the pack is in its cooked dishes, which make up half the menu. "Even at top sushi restaurants, once you move into the meat section, things can get sketchy," says Tim. "You get the chicken teriyaki and, well, it might as well have been from Shaw's or something. It's just an afterthought." At O Ya, by contrast, meat and chicken share top billing with the hyperfresh fish. Inspired by modern-style yakitori (grilled chicken) taverns in Tokyo, the O Ya kitchen delivers innovative small plates like tea-brined fried kurobuta pork ribs with hot sesame oil, honey and scallions ($17), chicken yakitori with celeriac purée, black truffles and chervil ($16), and seared Wagyu sirloin with curry-chestnut sauce and garlic chips ($42). And while tonkatsu (fried pork cutlet) may ring a bell for anyone who's spent much time navigating Japanese landlubbers menus, O Ya's version—served with foie gras, cabbage-shiso slaw and dashi applesauce ($21)—is a far cry from its pedestrian namesake.

Housed in a former fire station, O Ya is also a far cry from most other Japanese eateries in its décor, with exposed brick, concrete floors, and beams hanging from the soaring ceiling. More than half of the restaurant's 40 seats are set up around the oversized bar, which makes the place feel more gastro-pub than sushi joint. "Rather than the normal height of a sushi counter, when you're looking up at the chef, we wanted to put everybody on the same eye level for a more open, social feel," says Nancy, a trained sake sommelier. "You can come in alone, or with a couple of people, and feel comfortable—but with the same level of food and wine as a white tablecloth restaurant." O Ya, 9 East St., Boston (617-654-9900). —Jolyon Helterman

Ghost Dad

William Novak is coeditor of The Big Book of Jewish Humor, a collection of Jewish jokes and anecdotes that recently celebrated its 25th anniversary in print. Novak—who's also the father of this issue's IMPROPER cover boy—has ghostwritten memoirs for the likes of Nancy Reagan, Magic Johnson and Lee Iacocca. On March 15, Novak reads from the BBJH at Porter Square Books.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: Are Jews just as funny now as they were 25 years ago?

William Novak: Well, they're just as funny but now they're more mainstream in their humor. You used to see it only in recognizably Jewish comedians, but now Jewish humor is everywhere, like on South Park, The Simpsons and The Daily Show.

IB: Do you need to be Jewish to appreciate the jokes?

WN: There's a lot of humor that's for everyone, but there's some stuff where it's not even enough to be Jewish; you actually need to have a fair amount of knowledge about the religion.

IB: All three of your sons have caught the comic bug. Did their upbringing include heavy doses of the BBJH*?*

WN: Sometimes, but much more gratifying was that they actually read them on their own. Sometimes when we're all together, someone will yell out a punchline and everyone gets it. It's fantastic.

IB: You've written with an eclectic array of celebrities. Anyone you especially enjoyed working with?

WN: Oliver North stands out, mostly because he was so fun to work with and you wouldn't necessarily expect that.

IB: As part of our genetic testing, we want to ask you a few of the same questions we asked B.J. Here's one: Which member of the Love Boat cast would you most like to be shipwrecked with?

WN: Wow. I doubt that B.J. even knows that show, because I've certainly never watched it. I didn't use to be a big TV guy. I am now, though, and you can probably guess why.

IB: Funny or not so funny: knock-knock jokes involving dwarves.

WN: [Laughs.]

IB: We'll take that as a funny.

WN: Well, the question is funny.

IB: What about Boston breeds so many funny people?

WN: There are a lot of smart people here, and I've never met a funny person who wasn't smart. —Rich Levine

TASTY TIDBITS

Dice Rice, Baby

Red Sox on a Roll... We know it hasn't gotten much media coverage, but the Red Sox apparently signed a new Japanese pitcher this off-season; and word is that this guy (Daisuke Matsuzaka) is pretty damn good. How good? Well, consider this: He's yet to throw his first Major League pitch, and he already has an entire menu named after him. Just in time for baseball season, Brookline's super–sushi purveyor Fugakyu introduced a series of Daisuke-inspired items, including the Matsuzaka maki roll ($18)—composed of, among other things, matsutake mushroom, asparagus, tobikko, lobster meat and spicy mayo—and the Matsuzaka Martini ($8), which will be available starting April 1 and features a mix of vanilla vodka, crème de cacao and Godiva White Chocolate Liqueur. So if you were worried that you'd be eating, drinking and sleeping Dice-K mania this season... well, it looks like you were right. 1280 Beacon St., Brookline (617-734-1268). www.fugakyu.net.

Flamepoeira

New From KnowFat... Last month, KnowFat Lifestyle Grille celebrated a landmark addition to its chain of healthful restaurants with the opening of a new outpost at the Landmark Center, just down the street from Fenway. Puns aside, the new KnowFat offers the standard selection of health-conscious creations, like the barbecue-sirloin-tips-and-broccoli burro ($7) and the turkey tenderloin plate ($10). And if you don't fancy spending $5 for a box of Junior Mints, a KnowFat meal ought to make for a delicious smuggle into the nearby AMC Theatre. Landmark Center, 201 Brookline Ave., Boston (857- 254-0082).

Fugakyu's Mastsuzaka maki

KnowFat's Southwestern steak salad

Flamepoeira and Fortune... Flamepoeira (flahm-poh-AIR-uh) isn't your typical North End eating establishment—the name alone tells you that. Nonetheless, Langelo Ho, who opened the Euro-Asian café on Lewis Street this winter, is sure his eatery will find its niche within the horde of Italian joints. "It's a casual, relaxed place, where people can come enjoy some great food and inspired art," he tells us. Flamepoeira—a named derived from Ho's two favorite styles of dance, flamenco and capoeira—seats 30 customers and serves a mix of coffees, teas and espressos, as well as a menu that features items like a fried-chicken-dumpling salad and a marinated beef sandwich. And there's a reason Ho is so enthused about all the abstract oil paintings that adorn the walls: He painted them all himself. 3 Lewis St., Boston (617-227-9880).

Solid as a Rocco... Watertowners looking for a quick Italian fix have a brand-new savory source in Roccos Italian Foods. Located on Nichols Avenue, Roccos, which opened in mid-February, offers a broad selection of soups, stews, salads, sandwiches and pastas that top off around the $7 mark. Chef/owner Rocky Femino also has plans to expand the menu with a line of desserts and homemade pastas sold by the pound. 107 Nichols Ave., Watertown (617-924-9550). —RL

BEAUTY BUZZ

Itsy Bitsy Bikini Boutique

There may be slush on the sidewalks now, but sunnier days lie ahead. The owners of Wish, the Beacon Hill store for stylish staples, are readying for the season by putting the finishing touches on their brand new beachwear boutique, Wish Splash. Set to open in mid-March about a block away from Wish, this slice of summer in the city will sport a mod décor in pale aqua and white with orange accents, polka dot fitting-room curtains and cabana-like window treatments. "We're going for a Flamingo Kid–inspired atmosphere," says owner Kelley Frey in her sweet Southern twang. "It's a little bit retro." The shop will carry beachwear essentials, from designer tunics and swimsuits in every style by the likes of Milly Cabana, Trina Turk, Diane von Furstenberg and Shoshanna (swimsuits range from $100 to $200), to Mella & Lily Holt flip-flops, Ella Moss and Splendid T-shirts, Prada sunglasses and more. Frey explains, "People want the whole ensemble—a coordinating cover-up for every suit." That's a wrap. Wish Splash, 15 Charles St., Boston (617-228-0225). —Marni Elyse Katz

In the Wee Hours

Boston provides goodies, glee and grub for its late-night prowlers.

Boston Bowl

820 Morrissey Blvd., Boston

Grab your friends and head over to Boston Bowl for billiards, arcade gaming and bowling (candlepin and tenpin) into the wee hours of the morning.

CVS/pharmacy

CVS, 587 Boylston St., Boston; 36 White St., Cambridge; 1426 Mass. Ave., Cambridge; 715 Morrissey Blvd., Dorchester

In addition to their pharmacy services, these 24-hour branches of CVS have what it takes to ease that pounding headache or—ahem—any other late-night necessities.

FedEx Kinko's

187 Dartmouth St., Boston; 1 Mifflin Place, Cambridge; 2 Center Plaza, Boston (except Friday and Saturday, when it closes at 10)

Make that early-morning deadline! FedEx Kinko's provides its copying and printing services 24 hours a day, Sunday through Thursday, and closes at 11 pm on Friday and Saturday.

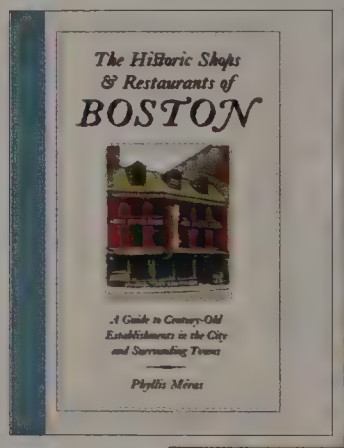
Shaw's Supermarket

152 Huntington Ave., Boston; 33 Kilmarnock St., Boston; 1065 Comm. Ave., Boston

Shaw's has the remedy for a grumbling stomach: Hungry Bostonians can swing by these locations for groceries any hour of the night.

Store 24 and White Hen Pantry

Store 24: 141 Mass. Ave., Boston ; 177 State St., Boston; 717 Boylston St., Boston; 140 Main St., Charlestown; 684 Centre St., Jamaica Plain; 1912 Beacon St., Brighton; 241 Market St., Brighton; 509 Cambridge St., Allston; 957 Comm. Ave., Newton; 321 Broadway, Cambridge. White Hen Pantry: 1868 Mass. Ave., Cambridge; 1710 Centre St., West Roxbury



These convenience stores are quick pit stops for dehydrated clubbers and college students, regardless of which side of the Charles they're on. But a note of caution: Many aren't actually open 24 hours. Consult our list (above) for the locations that are.

IMPROPER SPEAKING

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Ebb and Flow... Nicole Mills, massage therapist and owner of the new South End spa Nami (Japanese for "wave"), came up with the idea for her "dream spa" after a death in the family renewed her personal commitment to all-natural living. The new store offers hard-to-find, all-natural, Japanese-inspired products, including quick fixes for the skin, nails and hair. But for a real treat (if you can spare three or four hours), try one of the spa's custom packages, such as the ReishiMed hydrating facial (using a product with medicinal mushrooms), the Dead Sea mud and seaweed wrap or the scalp and facial massage (prices range from $235 to $350). Sounds like the perfect excuse for a mental health day to us. 12 Clarendon St., Boston (617-267-6264). www.namispa.com.

Big Brown Out... Remember the Meg Ryan shag, the Jennifer Aniston layer, the Madonna pixie? What would we do without inspiration from trendsetting celebrities and their ever-changing hairstyles? Right now, Cameron Diaz's coffee-hued 'do is the most sought-after look in Boston. According to local stylists, customers are showing up in droves with tabloid tears of J.T.'s ex, hoping to bring sexy back with dark locks. "I'm darkening at least three of my clients a week," says Emerge stylist Jeffrey Lyle, "and many have been blonde for years." Marc Harris of Salon Marc Harris agrees: "That and the bob are huge right now." And Darlene Morris, a stylist at James Joseph Studio, is seeing the same. "It's low-maintenance and healthier," she explains. "That makes it appealing."

Commercial Nostalgia... King's Chapel, Old Churches (North and South), the Granary Burying Ground: Unlike some newfangled cities, Boston's chockablock with historic haunts. And what's true of musty sanctuaries and desecrated cemeteries goes for shopping and dining, too. In her forthcoming guidebook, The Historic Shops and Restaurants of Boston, Phyllis Méras has assembled info on the city's dining and shopping options aged a century or older. Sure, there's the stuff most locals know about: the Harvard Coop, Long's Jewelers and the Morse Fish Company. But Méras also dishes out some secrets, like Bent's Cookie Factory in Milton, Schoenhof's Foreign Books, the Necco candy factory and Holbrow's Flowers. And did you know that Boston-based New Balance has been kicking it since 1906? So the next time you need a new pair of tennies, you can do your part to keep the city's history alive. www.littlebookroom.com.

Changing Channels... After 12 years on Newbury Street, husband-and-wife team James and Lisa Clark have closed the doors to James Patrick Salon and relocated to the Channel Center. Their salon is now primping clients in a renovated warehouse, offering full hair-care services and skin and body treatments soon. It's the first business to open at the new residential/office/retail complex in Southie, comprising 14 historical buildings and four new ones on seven acres. 35 Channel Center St., Unit 101, South Boston (617-247-2100). —*Leslie P. TALKING HEAD

Watch your back, Oprah: I've got my own TV show now.

A couple years back, I wrote about how I failed at an audition for a TV show about cars, but it really wasn't my fault because the casting people screwed up and squandered what was (obviously) a gold mine: me. Well, a few months back a media company approached me about hosting a new show called The Cars You Want. Now I've got a TV show, which just goes to show that you can accomplish your dreams, as long as you whine about them and then passively sit around for a couple of years.

Want to watch my show? Sorry, you can't. Comcast doesn't carry the network, which is called Lifeskool. (The idea behind Lifeskool's shows is that they'll help you improve your life, if not your speling.) This takes a lot of pressure off me, because while millions of people will be able to watch the show in places like New York and Los Angeles, I barely know anyone in either of those places, so I don't have to imagine them pointing and making fun of me when my forehead appears excessively shiny.

Not that my face is going to look shiny, because the powder took care of that. I'm pretty sure that after getting my face made up by a woman wielding a Bob Ross paintbrush in front of random passersby at the Chicago Auto Show, nothing will ever embarrass me again. A videotape starring me, Dustin Diamond and a llama could turn up, and I'd say, "Well, that's embarrassing. But not as embarrassing as that time at the Chicago Auto Show when I got my face powdered next to a Kia Rio."

At least I'm not a TV sound guy, who I've determined has not just the worst job in a TV crew, but possibly the worst job ever. Not only does he have to lug a bunch of heavy audio crap around all day, but his headphones are always connected to your microphone. Any gross noise you make—burping, sneezing, coughing up a loogie—he's hearing it. And because I couldn't figure out how to turn off my mike, that meant he got to listen in on all of my bathroom breaks, too. I wouldn't be surprised if TV crew sound guys always fast-forwarded through the first few seconds of "Gin and Juice."

As a TV novice, I quickly learned that the trick to hosting a taped show is to seem like you're making it up as you go, when you've actually got a script. My tactic was to completely blank on the script and then improvise my way through it, which came across as very natural—right up to the inevitable point when I'd screw up and drop a string of profanities. It was all very reminiscent of my performance in the second-grade Thanksgiving play, when I forgot a crucial line (something about maize, I believe) and tried to jog my memory right there on the stage. My mnemonic technique, if you can call it that, was to repeatedly smack myself in the side of the head with the flat of my palm, the way you might if there was water stuck in your ears or you were a forgetful, semi-OCD 7-year-old dressed as a starving Pilgrim. It would be years before I'd again be considered for the "advanced" classes. What was I talking about?

Oh, right: how down-to-earth I am even though I'm now a big TV star. Someone involved with the show told me a story about another program (and let's just say it has a somewhat lower profile than American Idol), on which the host quickly took to the idea of stardom and began demanding that people bring her obscure items like blueberry juice. Of course, I agreed that blueberry juice was a ridiculous thing to request—it's completely the wrong time of year for it. Right now, early spring, I like to demand kumquat purée laced with cat o nine tails.

That's right. Now that I have an on-demand TV show about cars, I expect the Entourage lifestyle to start any day. In fact I'm looking for a group of hangers-on i anyone's interested. The important qualification for joining my posse is that you give me conflicting personal and career advice while arguing over who gets to drive me around and make breakfast. Also, you'll need to get along with my new best friend Zsa Zsa Gabor's husband.

You wonder why Zsa Zsa isn't mad a that guy? Well, let's just say it takes connections to get into TV, and Zsa Zsa needed some young lovin' of her own while hubby was out fertilizing Anna Nicole Smith. Be sure to read my next column, "Paying Your Dues." iB

BY RICH LEVIN

And With the First Pick...

As the losses pile up, this Celtics season becomes all about Oden and Durant.

It's been a difficult winter for me here in Boston. I had well-documented issues with the Patriots' losing the AFC Championship. I've been forced to watch and read through hours of unbearably boring spring training coverage. (Am I the only one who couldn't care less about what Dice-K had for breakfast after his first bullpen session?) And to top it all off, I was faced with the devastating reality that Bridget Moynahan straight up lied to my face about being on the pill. But through all these hardships, there's been one uplifting light that's shined brighter than the 17 pounds of bling hanging around Big Papi's neck: the prospect of the Celtics scoring the top pick in this summer's draft.

With every pathetic loss, the dream of either Greg Oden or Kevin Durant wearing Celtic Green comes closer to being a reality. As the end of the season approaches and the losses continue to mount, that question of Oden vs. Durant is going to dominate all the Celtics talk. Well, I'm here to say that the talk needs to stop. If the Celtics do—by some absolutely glorious act of God—land that first pick, the choice is more obvious than the Donald's combover. But we'll get to that in a second. First, I'd like to lead everyone in a short prayer:

Dear God—Please, for the love of, um, yourself, do not let the return of Paul Pierce ruin the Celtics' chances of earning the first pick. He's too good. He's a top 15 guy. He's going to single-handedly win some games for the Celtics over the next couple of months. I'm terrified. Seriously though, we deserve this pick. Pierce deserves this pick. Make it happen. PS: Thanks for Marissa Miller.

OK, back to business. Durant or Oden: Who's it going to be? Both are considered can't-miss superstars, though each brings a different game to the court. Oden, a 7' monster with a sweet touch and the face of a 63-year-old, has been penciled in as the No. 1 pick of the 2007 draft since he was 16. He's considered next in the line of dominating NBA big men like Russell, Wilt, Kareem, Shaq and Duncan.

But then there's Durant. He's exploded onto the national scene this season, averaging 24 points and 11 rebounds as a freshman. Scouting reports have called him a more versatile Kevin Garnett and a bigger, stronger Tracy McGrady. It's even gotten to the point where a lot of local media guys are suggesting the Celtics would be better off taking Durant with the top pick. Well, I'd like to send a message to all those folks in the Durant camp: Stop it!

Why? Here are six reasons: Eric Montross, Travis Knight, Vitaly Potapenko, Tony Battie, Mark Blount and Kendrick Perkins.

These are the goons and oafs—aside from Perk, who I still have hope for—who have started at center for the Boston Celtics since Robert Parish left after the 1994 season. You think it's a coincidence that the C's have registered a whopping three winning seasons in the 13 years since the Chief split? If they're ever going to be a relevant NBA team again, they need a dominant center.

"But Durant is more skilled. He's got a better head for the game. He's more clutch." That's what Durant's backers will argue, and you know what? I agree. But that doesn't tell the whole story. Consider the Lakers team that won those three straight titles from 2000 to 2002. Who was their best player? Kobe Bryant. But in 2001, if you had asked NBA GMs to choose one guy from the Lakers to build a franchise around, 29 out of 29 would have picked Shaq.

IF THEY'RE EVER GOING TO BE RELEVANT AGAIN, THE CELTICS NEED A DOMINANT CENTER.

So yes, Durant is amazing, and he's going to get even better. In three years, he might be McGrady or Garnett, or Dominique Wilkins or Dirk Nowitzki. But as great as those four guys are/were, not one of them has won a title; in fact, Dirk is the only one ever to even make the NBA Finals.

On the other hand, Russell, Duncan and Kareem each won a title in their second NBA season. Shaq reached the Finals in his third season (and has won four rings since), and Wilt reached the conference finals in three of his first five years. Centers win, and superstar centers win big.

So while Durant is tempting, don't drink the Kool-Aid (unless you already have, in which case, Oh Yeah!!). Because if a title's in the cards, it's coming through the ginormous hands of old man Oden. End of story. IB

B.J. NOVAK

BY JONATHAN SOROFF PHOTOGRAPH BY LARISSA UNDERWOOD/LAMOINE PHOTO GROUP

Actor/writer/comedian B.J. Novak, 27, was born and raised in Newton and graduated from Newton South High School with his castmate on NBC's hit adaptation of the English comedy The Office, John Krasinski. Novak earned a degree in English and Spanish literature at Harvard before launching a career as a stand-up comic. He has appeared on Late Night With Conan O'Brien and Comedy Central's Premium Blend, and he continues to perform at clubs. Named one of Variety's 10 Comics to Watch in 2003, he was the lead accomplice on the second season of Ashton Kutcher's prank series, MTV's Punk'd, where he played elaborate practical jokes on the likes of Usher, Mya and Jaime Pressley. A supervising producer for The Office, he plays Ryan, the reluctant temp-turned-employee, and has written several of its most memorable episodes. His work on the series has earned him a Writer's Guild Award for best comedy series as well as three other WGA nominations and a Screen Actors Guild Award for best ensemble cast. This spring, he makes his feature film debut opposite Adam Sandler and Don Cheadle in Reign Over Me and appears in Knocked Up, director Judd Apatow's follow-up to The 40-Year-Old Virgin. Novak lives in L.A.

Jonathan Soroff: OK, if I can ask you to put on your wiseass hat, I've got my martini ready, so we can begin…

B.J. Novak: Well, I'm driving, so my martini is in the cup holder.

JS: Glad to see you're taking both highway safety and this interview so seriously. OK, first of all, what does B.J. mean to you?

BJN: It stands for honesty, thoughtful entertainment and respect for the audience.

JS: Well, at exactly which point would one gag?

BJN: Question three in this interview.

JS: Alright, I'll get off the B.J. I understand that you once wreaked havoc at the Museum of Fine Arts?

BJN: I did. With some friends, I replaced the audio tour of a Chinese art exhibit with my own commentary. It implored museum patrons to remove the glass from works of art and get high on the paint fumes, do the hokey-pokey, and I eventually cursed them out in very graphic language for not understanding the art. You want your museum-going experience to be transformative, and I think I did a piece of performance art that rivaled the exhibit.

JS: Who was the class clown: you or Krasinski?

BJN: He was the class clown. I was the class mime.

JS: What are the odds that two high school friends end up on the same hit TV show?

BJN: It's too weird for me even to contemplate. It sounds so crazy-unlikely.

JS: Maybe you two should come back to Massachusetts and get married.

BJN: Oh, we'll be in the same retirement home. I'm sure we'll be in a three-person marriage. There's no escaping that guy.… Good thing he's funny.

JS: You really know how to work the red carpet. What are your secrets?

BJN: Umm, don't wear red. You'll clash. Keep walking in the same direction; don't pace back and forth. No need to say "Cheese" for the camera. Oh, and Joan is the old one, Melissa is the young one. Don't make the same mistake I did and call Melissa "Joan."

JS: Are those your real eyes or are they blue contact lenses?

BJN: Are you coming on to me? It makes sense with your first few questions.

JS: I might be, but answer the question: Are they blue contact lenses?

BJN: I wear red contact lenses to mask how blue they are. My natural eyes would burn a hole through the TV lens.

JS: Is Bob Saget really your best friend?

BJN: He is a friend of mine.

JS: But not your best?

BJN: I stopped ranking my friends when I was around 24.

JS: Most excruciating moment on the show that you had to act?

BJN: One time I had to look mildly surprised when I was actually moderately surprised. That was a pretty big stretch.

JS: Well, we all know how expressive you are with your eyes from that appearance on Leno. You had Helen Mirren wetting herself.

BJN: Yes, I think it's clear who the better actor is. She gets all the roles that I turn down.

JS: So you were asked to play the queen?

BJN: Yeah, I turned it down, and now that she has all those nominations I'm kicking myself. I've been dreaming of a best-actress Oscar since I was a little kid.

JS: What would you say in your acceptance speech?

BJN: How you like me now, Helen?

JS: Worst job you ever had?

BJN: Krasinski and I both worked at Café Lampara in Newton the summer after our senior year in high school. He worked the takeout counter and I was a line cook. I didn't speak any Portuguese and he didn't have to. He got to interact with people he could have conversations with. I just learned a lot of Brazilian curse words.

> "ONE TIME I HAD TO LOOK MILDLY SURPRISED WHEN I WAS ACTUALLY MODERATELY SURPRISED. THAT WAS A PRETTY BIG STRETCH."

JS: Did you ever actually temp?

BJN: I did. I sat behind a reception desk for eight hours a day. No one said a word to me, and I had to copy a phone book manually into a database. I said, "Don't you think we should get a scanner?" and all I got was a shrug. I lasted two weeks.

JS: Exactly what does Steve Carell smell like?

BJN: Lysol.

JS: What's more fun, writing or acting?

BJN: Acting gets me more attention. I laugh more when I'm writing.

JS: Funny or not funny: knock-knock jokes involving dwarves?

BJN: Not funny. Deeply offensive.

JS: Some of your best friends are dwarves?

BJN: All of my best friends are dwarves, with the exception of Bob Saget.

JS: OK, let's play gay or Canadian: Michael Feinstein?

BJN: Isn't there a middle ground? Like Nordic-American?

JS: No. How about Lance Bass?

BJN: As a half-Canadian myself, I feel there's something wrong about speculating on one's Canadian-ness. It goes against my ethnicity.

JS: So is asking about Charo out of the question?

BJN: Yes, it is. Again, deeply offensive. I'm not easily offended, and I've been deeply offended twice during this interview.

JS: This is getting to be a bit like interviewing Robert DeNiro.

BJN: This interview's going to be a bombshell! Boston will never be the same.

JS: Let's play "Odds out of Vegas." What do you think O.J. Simpson's chances are at a career comeback?

BJN: It all depends. He's had several careers. Football? Odds are low. But I think it's quite possible that he could be a celebrity defendant again. I'll take 3 to 2 on that one.

JS: One reality show you'd like to be on?

BJN: It's Good to Be… I'd love to be on that.

JS: That's the most conceited thing I've ever heard.

BJN: [Laughs.] Well, realistically, there are very few reality shows one can hope to be on someday.

JS: One member of the Love Boat cast you'd most like to get shipwrecked with?

BJN: Do they have to be Canadian?

JS: No. I'd pick Isaac the bartender. I think you need to bone up on your crappy Aaron Spelling TV shows.

BJN: Newton South kids have to do their homework, unlike Beaver Country Day kids who can just watch the Love Boat all night.

JS: Don't be disrespecting my alma mater.

BJN: Sorry. But I don't remember what trash I watched. I know I watched a lot.

JS: You were too stoned to remember.

BJN: You said it, not me.

JS: So what is it about Boston that produces so many funny people?

BJN: I think there's a lot of intelligence in the air. Everyone on the T is reading a book or newspaper. There are a lot of smartasses. And maybe some of that Irish influence. There's a lot of wit, and you just kind of soak it up.

JS: Last question: Fill in the blank. The next time I'm in Newton, the very first thing I'm going to do is _____.

BJN: Get a ride from Holden's Taxi and hold on for dear life. IB

From torch songs to tassels and the art of the tease, Boston's cabaret and burlesque scene serves up intimate, sexy, classic entertainment.

SEEMS LIKE OLD TIMES

SOMETHING PLEASANT HAS HAPPENED TO NIGHTLIFE IN THE 21st century. Maybe it's due to the popularity of American Idol. Maybe it's a ...ed for simplicity. Maybe it's just that we're always looking for new ...ys to kick it old-school. For whatever reason, in the past few years ...'ve seen a resurgence of cabaret and burlesque lounge acts in Boston: ...no bars, variety shows and classy, sexy dancing girls. Some are more ...traditional performances, reminiscent of the early 20th century, in which the entertainers tell a story. Some are all-out parties, in which audience members are encouraged to take the stage and sing. All of them promise a refreshing blend of intimacy and fun. × "Cabaret is sort of an amorphous thing," says Jim Keating, president of the Boston Area Cabaret Association. "What makes it distinct is not only that it's a live musical performance, but that in cabaret the fourth wall between the audience and performer is down." × Dear reader, tear down that wall! Put down that Wii! And come join Boston's small world of burlesque and cabaret.

THE BOSTON BABYDOLLS AT THE PARADISE LOUNGE

Last Sunday of every month, 8 pm; 969 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-562-8800); www.bostonbabydolls.net

In the 1930s and '40s, popular burlesque theaters had a universal signal to warn the striptease artists that cops were in the audience. A red light would blink backstage, alerting the women to perform a quaint, tame version of their usual sexy act. They dubbed this the "Boston Version."

Things have changed in the last 60 years, but let's face it: Boston's still full of prudes. The Boston Babydolls are trying to do something about that. Founded three years ago, the city's best-known burlesque troupe aims to put the sexy back in fun and the class back in sexy.

The Babydolls comprise half a dozen striptease artists and the occasional strongwoman, comedian, juggler or ukulele player. They perform all over the East Coast at nightclubs and private functions, with a standing monthly gig at the Paradise Lounge.

"We create a safe space, a special environment, in which objectifying women is not only OK, it's encouraged," says Ol' Scratch, the group's front man, who sports a swanky fedora and pinstripe pants onstage. "We encourage as much hooting, catcalling and wolf whistling from the audience as possible."

That said, Scratch stresses the difference between a burlesque show and a strip club—namely, that if you just want to see a bunch of naked women, you should go to the latter.

"Burlesque is about theater and creating sexual tension, and strip clubs are about sex," says Scratch, noting that while you'll see plenty of pasties at a Babydolls show, you won't see any full nudity. "Burlesque is more about the tease than the stripping."

The typical Bostonian theatergoer doesn't know how to react to the Babydolls. "There is a challenge in Boston," Scratch says. "Boston audiences are quieter than any other places we've performed. It's funny to be at, say, a rockabilly show where the audience is yelling and cheering for a band and screaming their heads off, but as soon as you put a beautiful woman onstage, the room goes quiet. They don't know how to react."

The troupe encourages certain people in the audience to get the catcalling started, and then the audience relaxes and follows suit. According to Scratch, modern Boston burlesque is a lot more fun than modern New York burlesque.

"The New York scene is heavily influenced by performance art," he says. "There's a lot of political and sometimes ugly or grotesque burlesque. And you'll find unusual things, like two women doing a number with one of them dressed as the Titanic and the other dressed like an iceberg."

The Babydolls represent typical burlesque artists from the 1930s through the '50s. In early February 2007, a few of the women performed briefly at the Coolidge Corner Theater in Brookline, stripping down to their pasties for a mostly staid crowd. Among the audience members was Joan Parker, a lovely former burlesque dancer who was celebrating her 70th birthday that night with her husband. She says the show was fairly indicative of how things were when she was in her 20s, but adds, "They were more polished in my day, and they really took their time."

Here's a sampling of the women you'll meet at a Babydolls show:

Miss Mina, also a cofounder, is a cool, thin blonde who models herself after Marlene Dietrich in the movie Blue Angel. "Her favorite numbers are the ones where she looks at the audience with disdain; she has a vaguely Teutonic air about her," Scratch says.

Betty Blaize, the most outgoing of the Babydolls, stands over 6 feet tall in socks. "Add heels and the giant rolls of hair that she piles on top of her head, and she's a remarkably striking figure," Scratch says.

And then there's the multitalented Dominique Immora—a hula-hoop whiz, fire breather and poi spinner, as well as a striptease artist. Tall, pale and somber, "She's vaguely reminiscent of Morticia Addams," Scratch says. "Dead sexy."

VARIETAE AT THE MIDWAY CAFÉ

Showtimes vary; 3496 Washington St., Jamaica Plain (617-524-9038); www.midwaycafe.com

A drag queen named FoXXXy First Class leans against the counter in a Jamaica Plain kitchen, perusing handwritten show tune lyrics.

At the Encore Lounge's open-mike night, paid performers share the stage with unwinding conventioneers, brazen bachelorettes and every shade of drunk in between.

The lyricist, local writer Chris Braiotta, peers over FoXXXy's shoulder.

"Acidophilus," he says.

The song is called "Ladies: Know the Science of Your V-Zone." It's a hip-hop number about getting rid of yeast infections.

Welcome to a rehearsal of Varietae—a hilarious low-budget, late-night cabaret show, performed just about monthly at the friendly, divey Midway Café in JP.

The show is produced by the trio of disc jockey Area D, musician Adam Hirsh and host Vice V'Ersatile (who declines to be interviewed out of character). Founded in 2005 as the Musk Disco-Electro Dance Party, Varietae has grown into a full-fledged variety show. It features original and cover songs, sexy dance routines, a full band called the Sinphony Forkestra, a DJ, an opera singer, a rapper and occasionally a miniature dachshund. The group's Web site boasts that Varietae has culled its members "from sources as diverse as the Boston Symphony Orchestra and gothtronic [band] Plunge Into Death."

While edgy, the show qualifies as "classical" cabaret because it breaks down that fourth wall: The stage is almost at floor level, so V'Ersatile can talk to and with the audience members, not at them. And the show always tells a story with music.

Varietae is by turns avant-garde, classical, historical, biblical, smart and very, very silly.

Last fall's three-part epic, Jesus Vice Superstar, featured the character of Salome performing "The Dance of the Several Veils" to Hall and Oates' "Rich Girl." (V'Ersatile introduced her as "the original Jewish princess.") Salome bumped and ground her way around a goofy John the Baptist, whose apparently disembodied head bobbed to the beat on his platter. Mary, Mother of God, sang Mr. Mister's "Broken Wings" to a sexy Jesus, who was crucified at center stage. Later in the show, Jesus belted out a slightly altered version of Journey's "Faithfully." And when the centurion who was guarding Jesus told the audience that he used to be a gladiator, Vice V'Ersatile vamped, "Glad-i-a-tor? That's how he feels after he eats fish on Fridays."

A 2006 holiday show starred the Glory Holelujah Chorus, in which a dozen or so performers dressed up as public restroom stalls and sang doctored Christmas carols—"The First Ho-el," for example. (You can check it out on YouTube.)

More recently, Varietae has been performing a space trilogy, in which Vice, FoXXXy and a cast of tens search the universe for a life-force substance called "sprinkle."

"It's all about the epic struggle to control the universe, with music and package pants," V'Ersatile says.

A few of Varietae's motley cast: Jose Marimba Torrez (top); Mother V'Ersatile with Baby V'Ersatile (middle); and your host, Vice V'Ersatile (bottom)

Each performance is plot-driven and unique, but there are some constant characters in every performance, and the shows will make the most sense to those familiar with them.

A brief primer: Host V'Ersatile is a flamboyant lounge lizard from the planet Howaya. His character travels through time and space in a giant phallus, which is why some shows take place in 33 A.D. and some take place in another galaxy. FoXXXy First Class is Vice's cheeky "gal" pal. Jose Marimba Torrez is Vice's archenemy. Other memorable Varietae characters have included an ineffectual Pilgrim named Miles Standoffish; the dueling Neil Diamonds—Jewish Neil vs. Rock Star Neil; the female superhero Spiderclam; and a one–sight gag comedian called the Nutty Professor. ("He stands on a chair, shucking nuts and yelling, 'Nuts to you,'" Hirsh explains.)

The music in the show is always eclectic. "My numbers alone have ranged from Pat Benatar to Dvorák to Cole Porter to a disco song composed entirely [out of] X-rated text messages from a sweetheart," says Ondine Brent, a regular member of the Varietae cast who also sings with the Boston Pops.

Generally Varietae shows start at 10 pm, and they always end with a dance party. The length of each show varies. "Flaccid, it's 43 minutes, but fully erect it's, like, two hours," Hirsh says.

OPEN MIKE AT THE ENCORE LOUNGE AND CABARET

Seven nights a week, about 9 pm–1:30 am; 275 Tremont St., Boston (617-728-2162); www.roxyplex.com

"Karaoke is for people who don't know the words." So says Arnold Kaplan, a 72-year-old retired garment cutter who's been singing open-mike show tunes at the Encore Lounge and Cabaret, accompanied by one of seven skilled pianists, at least five nights a week since the bar opened four years ago. Kaplan generally arrives at least 15 minutes before the paid performers do, donning thick glasses and a Boston accent to match. Come in on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, Friday or Saturday and you're almost guaranteed to hear his signature performance of Gene Raskin's "Those Were the Days." If you're buzzed on $12 cocktails, as is most of the crowd, then you'll sing along.

"Arnold's an institution," says Mary Callanan, who performs at the Encore on Thursday nights with the wry Brian Patton.

Kaplan is one of the few constants at this upscale but comfortable little piano bar in the Theater District. Sandwiched between the Roxy dance club and the Boston Courtyard Tremont Hotel, its location garners a transient clientele: conventioneer hotel guests, post-show theatergoers, flamboyant cabaret fans, talented Emerson University students, bachelorettes hyped up from the Friday-night Chippendales show and the occasional Chippendale himself.

"The fun about this is you never know what people are going to request or sing," Patton says. As such, the paid performers at the Encore are skilled at patter. On a recent Thursday, an open-mike amateur requests and sings a little-known show tune that shows no signs of ending. After the seventh verse or so, Patton leans into his mike at the piano and murmurs, "Later that day...."

Every night is open to amateur singers at the Encore, but much of the time—especially on low-attendance weeknights—a professional cabaret singer is the one at the mike. All the paid acts are pretty good, and they're all different. Michelle Currie on Wednesdays is bluesy; Steve Heck on Mondays is jazzy; Patton and Callanan are theatrical. If the room allows, they all get to show off their skills as true cabaret performers—telling their stories through song. But Callanan says that's rare.

"In a piano bar I can still do some of my cabaret numbers, but it's hard to tell an intimate part of my life if someone's having a fight with her boyfriend in the corner," Callanan says. "So mostly it's about us pulling every trick out of the book to entertain you while there's a swirl of activity going on."

And partner Patton maintains that Callanan's an ace. "Whether it's a bunch of lesbians or drunken bachelorettes, she knows how to get the crowd going," Patton says.

CABARET/OPEN MIKE AT FRANK'S STEAKHOUSE

Friday and Saturday nights, 9 pm-closing ; 2310 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-661-0666); www.franksteakhouse.com

George Ravanis nods toward the burgeoning Saturday-night crowd in the lobby of Frank's Steakhouse, a neighborhood restaurant and saloon tucked into the quiet stretch of Mass. Ave. near Porter Square.

"You see all those people?" he says. "They're not waiting for dinner." The huddled masses range in age from 21 to 81. And they're here for the cabaret.

Supposedly the oldest steakhouse in Greater Boston, Frank's has sported a piano bar lounge for around 50 years, says Ravanis, the restaurant's gregarious owner. Popularity waned a little during the '90s karaoke boom. "For a while, even we had karaoke in here, much to my dismay," Ravanis says. Lately, though, Frank's has seen a newfound interest in its cabaret performers.

Brian Patton, who also performs at Boston's Encore Lounge and Cabaret, plays at Frank's on Fridays. Patton favors hits of the 1970s and early '80s. John O'Neil plays on Saturday nights, backed by pianist Jim Rice. O'Neil prefers show tunes.

Ravanis differentiates the singers thusly: "John is more flamboyant. Brian is... not as flamboyant." (On cue, the following Saturday, O'Neil saunters into the lounge sporting a full-length fur coat and an upswept mop of blond hair. "He looks like a well-aged child star," says one of the patrons.)

O'Neil has been regaling the Frank's crowd for almost four years. "Certainly, in the last year, the room has taken off. On Saturday nights, oftentimes you can't get a seat," he says, adding that the open-mike portion of the night has become especially popular. "I think they love the spontaneity that karaoke doesn't have. Each time could be a fresh retelling of a song, in almost any direction."

To that end, so as not to disturb diners with sensitive ears, "We hold off on the open mike until after 10 pm—just in case," Ravanis says. But he and O'Neil concur that most of the open-mike regulars are actually pretty good.

The repertoire at Frank's is broad as piano bars go, but there are a few old standby numbers, which include audience-driven dance tunes.

"You have to experience 'Daybreak' by Barry Manilow at Frank's," O'Neil says. "It's a whole room fully choreographed and in sync."

"The 12 Days of Christmas" is another winner, he says; there are 12 parts, guaranteeing brief fame for a dozen members of the crowd. "People come in here in November and say, 'I'm six geese a-laying! I'm six geese a-laying, and I've been practicing all year!'" O'Neil says.

That said, newbies shouldn't be daunted by the tight-knit neighborhood crowd at Frank's. "As a newcomer, you'll be invited to the best house party in town," O'Neil says. "One of the reasons cabaret is taking off is that the performers are practically screaming from the stage: 'Come on in!'"

"IT'S HARD TO TELL AN INTIMATE PART OF MY LIFE IF SOMEONE'S HAVING A FIGHT WITH HER BOYFRIEND IN THE CORNER."

IF THESE WALLS COULD TALK

Some of Boston's most popular hangouts are haunted by the ghosts of debauchery past. These are their stories. By WYNDHAM LEWIS

THERE ARE 8 MILLION naked stories in the city, or something like that. Actually, Boston used to have all sorts of naked stories, about pimps, pushers, pole dancers . . . well, you get the picture. Over the last half-century, however, as the Boston Redevelopment Authority (BRA) set about to clean up Boston's more prurient neighborhoods and nightspots, those tawdry tales have mostly gone the way of Celtics championships and Whitey Bulger.

Yes, old-timers may harbor nostalgic memories of the burlesque shows at the Old Howard Theatre, recalling Park Square and the Combat Zone somewhat less nostalgically as neighborhoods rife with hookers, junkies and dives with unambiguous names like the Pussycat Lounge and the Naked I. But the BRA did its job: The fan-dancers of yore have been replaced by a sophisticated playground of martini menus and chic, glitzy nightspots that rival any in the country.

Yet don't be surprised if one evening, as you chase your Kobe mini-burger with a pomegranate gimlet, you catch a vision of the bygone, BRA-less era. After all, some of the city's hippest haunts stand on sacred (and/or sordid) ground, meaning their ghosts have a host of sketchy stories to tell.

FROM RAISING HELL to BRAISING WELL

NOW Eastern Standard is an authentic Parisian-style brasserie in Kenmore Square's Hotel Commonwealth. The long bar, sidewalk seating and spacious dining room make it a perfect spot for brunch, dinner and Red Sox pre-gaming. The restaurant's excellent menu and casual elegance make it hard to fathom that a portion of owner Garrett Harker's office was once the Rathskeller's rather pungent mosh pit.

THEN National acts such as REM, Hüsker Dü and the Police trotted through the hostile, humid and hallowed halls of the Rat, Kenmore Square's landmark punk club, but national acts were the exception. Many local bands played their first, last or only shows in what can be described as Boston's CBGB, or the American Standard of rock clubs. Rat, R.I.P.

FROM CHEAP GIN SHOTS to CHI-CHI BOÎTE

NOW Clio, in the Hotel Eliot in the Back Bay, is Ken Oringer's culinary mecca, routinely cited as one of Boston's truly innovative restaurants—and for that matter, one of its best. The dining room's creative décor complements the menu's eclectic styling, but if haute cuisine isn't your thing, you can always check out the space's equally elegant cohabitant, Uni Sashimi Bar.

THEN Bill Lee famously quipped, just before game seven of the 1975 World Series, that win or lose he was heading to the Eliot Lounge, the Hotel Eliot's bar room that once occupied Clio's space. The Spaceman wasn't referring to the spruced up Eliot Lounge of the '90s, but to the gin joint he and other colorful characters frequented throughout the rough-and-tumble '70s.

FROM THE NAKED BUNCH to LADIES WHO LUNCH

NOW Overlooking the Public Garden, the Four Seasons brings to mind world-class accommodations and amenities. Visiting celebrities often rub elbows with Boston's swinging socialites during the evenings at the hotel's Bristol Lounge, while by day executives and pols power-lunch there.

THEN In the mid-'70s, this spot was home to poles of a different variety: The Teddy Bear Lounge once occupied the Park Square location. The Four Seasons assures us that its Teddy Bear Tea (an annual Christmas toy drive) was in no way inspired by former tenants.

FROM QUEER CLUB to BEER PUB

NOW The Hill Tavern is among Beacon Hill's most popular pubs. Recent BC grads dare to test the waters of inter-collegiate relationships in the Hill's hot spot for hooking up. Strong pub fare, an array of beers on tap and natural sunlight make it all but unrecognizable to the location's former fans.

THEN Memorialized in John Reid's 1973 landmark coming-out novel, The Best Little Boy in the World, Sporter's was a gay bar with no sign and no windows, a collection of characters and (on a good night) a great dance floor. Fortunately, gay bars now see the light of day—as does Andrew Tobias (Reid's true identity), who graduated from Harvard and Harvard Business School and later wrote another bestseller of a different stripe: The Only Investment Guide You'll Ever Need.

FROM LOCAL ROCK to STOLI ROCKS

NOW The Wonder Bar is a martini oasis nestled in Allston's beery student ghetto. This is the place in Allston that makes it OK to have an economics degree and a job downtown while still living with your roommates from BU.

THEN The Wonder Bar operates where Bunratty's once saw the development of the local rock scene in the '70s and '80s. Bands like 'Til Tuesday, the Del Fuegos, In the Flesh and the Neighborhoods cut their teeth at this scum-caked rock 'n' roll dungeon. At least one IMPROPER contributor may have had his first fake ID snatched by the bouncer there.

FROM DANCING BELLIES to FANCY GELÉES

NOW Stately Icarus on the South End's Appleton Street provides upscale cuisine and a stellar wine list in one of Boston's most romantic rooms. Icarus spearheaded the neighborhood's restaurant boom in 1978 and remains a leading light.

THEN This section of the South End was historically Middle Eastern; in fact, a Syrian grocer still operates on Shawmut Ave. Fifty years ago, however, you didn't need to look so hard for evidence of the cultural imprint. Club Khiam, occupying the spot that now houses Icarus, was the belly-dancing club in the South End, teeming with sexy dancers and "connoisseurs" of the art form.

FROM SWISHING HIPS to FISH & CHIPS

NOW Grand Canal, just around the corner from the TD Banknorth Garden, boasts one of Boston's most authentic Irish pub experiences, serving Celtics and Bruins pre-gamers Guinness and shepherd's pie before they head over to the Garden for $7 beers and another disheartening loss.

THEN Back in the day when Larry Bird and Cam Neely were routinely rousing the (old) Garden faithful, this spot was a dance club called Bobby's. It was nominally a gay club, but a welcoming vibe gave it a solid gay/straight mix that was unusual for the day.

FROM PORNO FLICKS to BILLIARD STICKS

NOW The Ladder District's Felt is a velvet-rope, line-down-the-sidewalk kind of nightclub with pool tables, dancing and a good percentage of Boston's hottest scenesters. Some might say it's the kind of place where you hope to be seen.

THEN The same cannot be said about the establishment that once occupied the same section of sidewalk. At its nadir in the late '70s, the Modern Theatre showed adult films and sold porn in its bookstore. In short, it was the place not to be seen.

FROM STEAMY GAMS to HOT STEAMED CLAMS

NOW Legal Sea Foods ranks as one of Boston's most venerable institutions—not to mention one of the few tourist attractions that consistently exceeds the hype. When Roger Berkowitz and company opened their Park Square location, they were sure they had a great spot in historic Boston. We wonder whether they knew the history of the location.

THEN Above Legal's current dining room in the '60s was the Playboy Club. Which is only fitting, since the Hef is a direct descendant of William Bradford, who arrived on the Mayflower.

Other old faves have also been replaced, though not necessarily by nightspots:

BUZZY'S ROAST BEEF, Boston's best drunken dining destination, is now part of the MGH campus.

JACK'S, a killer Cambridge rock club that suspiciously burned to the ground, became an office complex.

TWIN X THEATER, house of porn, inhabited the same hole in the ground as the former Glass Slipper.

LIBERTY THEATER & PEEP SHOW (no explanation necessary, we trust) has become My Tan Gifts & Shoe Repair.

THE NAKED I, "Home of Princess Cheyenne," was bulldozed and replaced by Archstone Luxury Condominiums.

TWO O'CLOCK LOUNGE, an exotic-dancing emporium, is our rather pedestrian RMV.

LIDO THEATER, another spot for dirty pictures, now puts up the city's high rollers in the Ritz Tower.

STATE THEATER, an occasional porno theater, offers a different kind of workout and educational experience at the Sports Club/L.A. and the Spruce Street School.

THE CHANNEL, a place to catch your Sunday-afternoon (!) hardcore, is just a parking lot to park your hardtop.

INTERMISSION LOUNGE, a backup for anyone unable to get into the Naked I, is the Malaysian restaurant Penang.

119 MERRIMACK, the worst-appointed gay bar in Boston, became the well-appointed Onyx Hotel.

NARCISSUS—known in the '80s as "Nar-syphillus," and home of the mullet—still serves a young crowd, as the Barnes & Noble—BU bookstore.

Our famished foodie braves Boston's witching hour to sniff out the best in late-night snacks.

Post-MIDNIGHT Munchies

ANYONE WHO SKULKS ABOUT OUR FAIR CITY IN THE wee hours of the morning faces two incontrovertible truths. First, T time is over; you'll be hoofing it or shelling out cab fare. And second: Within seconds of lumbering out of that bar, theater or stadium and onto the sidewalk, your body's going to have food on the brain, tormenting your tummy with nostalgia for the second half of that meatball sub you couldn't finish five hours earlier. × It's 1 am—do you know where your noshes are? Sure, you could always grab a slice of pepperoni at the nearest house of pizza, a plate of pancakes from IHOP or one of those mysterious meat-and-cheese cylinders rolling 'round in the display case near the 7-Eleven cash register. But in this notoriously early-to-bed city, the good news is that there's a surprising abundance of post-midnight snacking options—no matter what level of food snobbery you're still clinging to under the influence of one (or six) too many PBR talls. Pub-style burgers and fries? Easy. Scallion pancakes and shrimp fried rice? You bet. But who knew that at 12:30 am you could still sink your fork into a tangled pile of hand-cut linguini with asparagus, poached egg and truffles, or devour a fall-apart-tender lamb shank with all the classic trimmings? × Boston may not be the city that never sleeps. But after feasting on some of these seriously scrumptious late-night bites, you'll be just as content to drift off... belly up, of course.

CHIC AND SLEEK

Nebo

90 North Washington St., Boston
(617-723-NEBO)
www.neborestaurant.com
Serving Food Until: 2 am, Thu.–Sat.

Noteworthy Nibbles:
Salumi Misti ($12–$26), Ricotta Bruschette ($9), Arancini ($10), Ricotta Pie ($8), Gino Pizza ($14), Jezebel's Kiss ($8)

THE SCENE: Spain gets all the credit for popularizing pinchos portions, but tapas-style dining is equally popular in Rome and Milan—and as of about a year and a half ago, in the North End, too. Now when you're rolling out of your Theater District watering hole and hunger for something sexier than a sub or a stack of pancakes, bellying up to Nebo's (i.e. North End Boston's) white marble bar for slabs of oversized potato-bread bruschetta ($2–$12) or a trio of honey-drizzled risotto orbs ($10) is a pretty scrumptious option. (Unless, of course, you're driving: Just because it's a few blocks off of Hanover Street doesn't mean the parking gets any easier.)

Sexy doesn't mean snooty. Despite the trendy vibe emanating from this modish enoteca's spot-lit, espresso-dyed table benches and its in-vogue clientele, there's still enough of a sports-fan ruckus brewing at the bar and plenty of warm gestures—handshaking, back-patting and the archetypal Italian insistence that you "try my mother's famous ricotta pie" ($8; and you really should)—that the only reason to leave before 2 am will be the blindsiding food coma. Not to mention coproprietor Carla Pallotta's demand that you come back 12 hours later for lunch.

OCCIDENTAL TOURIST

Suishaya

2 Tyler St., Boston
(617-423-3848)
Serving Food Until: 1 am, daily

Noteworthy Nibbles:
Ok Dol Bi Bim Bap ($9.95), Spicy Salmon Maki ($4.50), Udon with Shrimp Tempura ($9.95)

THE SCENE: If after-hours Boston were a cell, Chinatown would be its nucleus. True, Hudson, Tyler, Beach and Essex streets may seem pretty tame after the craze of shoulder-to-shoulder shoppers they see during the day, but if you take a peek inside some of the night-owl hot spots, things are hopping with a different sort of frenetic energy. Suishaya's old-school, Three's Company–era dining room—yes, even the narrow wooden sushi counter calls to mind a cheesy '70s sitcom—is the after-hours pick for a motley crew of clientele who dig the menu's pleasantly schizophrenic Japanese-Korean approach. (Besides: At that hour, who has enough wits about them to quibble over national provenance?) Smart money is on the ok dol bi bim bap (a cast-iron cauldron of rice, tofu and vegetables served with several dishes of condiments; $9.95) and the cobweb of tangled udon noodles in a steaming broth ($9.95). Plus, during those wee hours between 10 pm and 1 am, nearly two dozen of the restaurant's staple items get discounted to the $10 range and/or "boxed" along with a salad, some oblong tempura spears, shumai and a few pinwheels of California maki . And if it weren't for David Allan Boucher's killjoy "Bedtime Magic" warbling from the radio speakers up above, the sinus-clearing kick of the neon-green wasabi alone would be enough to rally you on to your next destination. Another round of sake? Hai, dozo.

QUICK HITS

Bova's Bakery

134 Salem St., Boston
(617-523-5601)
www.northendboston.com/bovabakery
Serving Food Until: 24 hours daily

Noteworthy Nibbles:
Oreo Rice Krispie Treats ($2), Cannoli ($1.50–$2.75), Bova Special (a sub with prosciutto, fresh mozzarella, sweet basil and dressing; $6.50)

THE SCENE: There's a scene in the film As Good as It Gets where Jack Nicholson's Melvin justifies knocking on the door of a nearby bakery at 4 am: "We're just two people who like warm rolls." But no such explanation is required at this humble, standing-room-only storefront in Boston's Little Italy, which for the past 80-some years has stayed open even later. In fact, it's always open. The sign over the door is so washed out that stepping inside this sanctuary of (mostly) sweets makes you feel like, well, an insider—and one who knows better than to dismiss the craggy linoleum tiles and callous, operating-room lighting as the makings of just another "connah stah." Even if this weren't the North End, where the no-frills joints demand the most respect, there'd be no denying the sheer charm of helping yourself to a French baguette ($1.75) from a laundry basket and watching the guy in the tattered white apron sit down to a tray of cannoli shells and hand-pipe in the filling.

As for the rest of the bread, walk in the door, turn to face 2 o'clock, and look up. Talk about the staff of life: Loaves of scala ($2.00–$2.50), Bostoni ($1.25–$2), stubby ($2) and rings ($2–$3.50) practically scrape the ceiling, while the blurry glass cases are stuffed 'round the clock with glossy fruit tarts ($3.75), cocoa-dusted tiramisu cups ($3.50), cream-stuffed Whoopie pies ($3.00) and, of course, fresh ricotta cannoli ($1.50-$2.75) that many argue rival the likes of the handsomer haunts over on Hanover Street. And if you opt to ditch last call and make it over there before 1 am, all the better; take that opportunity to dig into one of the overstuffed subs ($6-$6.95), a slice of pizza ($2.25) or a calzone ($7/lb.) before dessert.

HIGH DIVE

South Street Diner

178 Kneeland St., Boston
(617-350-0028)
www.southstreetdiner.com
Serving Food Until: 5 pm-5 am, Mon.-Wed.; 24 hours, Thu.-Sun.

Noteworthy Nibbles:
Frappé (if they have chocolate syrup, ask for the Black-and-White; $5), Chocolate Fantasy French Toast ($8), Monte Cristo ($8)

THE SCENE: Most guidebooks list Newbury Street's posh cafés and bistros as the city's prime people-watching venues. But if you want to take in an honest cross-section of Bostonians, you're better off heading east about a mile and a half and tucking into the city's preeminent spot for sucking down straw-propping frappés ($5) and raspberry lime rickeys ($3)—and the later you can go, the better the view.

The South Street Diner is the proverbial ugly duckling of Kneeland Street—the metal siding, dwarfed stature and tacky neon lighting don't exactly line up with the neighborhood's luxury loft high-rises—but its anti-establishment (literally, even) raggedness carries a certain charisma and seems to reel in just about anyone and everyone: Throngs of tweaked-out, jittery bachelors inhale greasy cheeseburgers ($8) and lunchbox-sandwich halves of chocolate-schmeared French toast ($8), while bleary-eyed damsels clad in their club clothes seek refuge in the comforting warmth of the room and a gooey grilled cheese ($5).

And those are just the customers. The skinny guy with the spiky metal belt makes a mean sugar-dusted Monte Cristo ($8), and the staff dialogue provides afterparty-worthy entertainment.

POSH NOSH

Top of the Hub

800 Boylston St., Boston

www.topofthehub.net
Serving Food Until: 1 am, daily

Noteworthy Nibbles:
Spicy Lobster Soup ($9), Brie with Walnuts Baked with Dried Fruit Compote ($13), Sour Apple Martini ($10)

THE SCENE: Trying to enter this pseudo-exclusive tourist destination late on a busy weekend night calls to mind a cross between showing up unannounced at the Pentagon and starring on Deal or No Deal. Dressed to the nines, you're headed off at the pass by a brawny, black-suited bouncer-type and a slight, blonde-ringleted sweet face who says (with a smile) that the wait could be an hour or more. Okay, fine. So you line up along the Italian-tiled lobby with the Russian exchange students, the buoyant post-theater couple and the smooth dude who "just wanted to take my girlfriend out for a special evening"—and glare at the front desk, waiting for the phone to ring.

Fifty-eight minutes later: clearance. You're ushered to the brass elevators and propelled up to the 52nd floor. There, you can seize the empty barstools you agreed to downstairs or negotiate coveted table seats in the cream-clothed butterfly chairs. But all the hassle is forgotten once you dip into an upturned-bonnet bowl of Asian-inspired lobster soup ($9)—a silky-smooth bisque broken by chunks of claw meat—a remoulade-sauced lump crabcake ($13), or even an indulgent ounce of American caviar ($125). Either way, you've now got license to sip Skyy vodka from twisty martini glasses ($10–$13), admire the artful (if veering toward gaudy) presentation of yellowfin tuna tartar ($15) while the jazz trio croons in the background, and check out the kickass view that gives this spot its name.

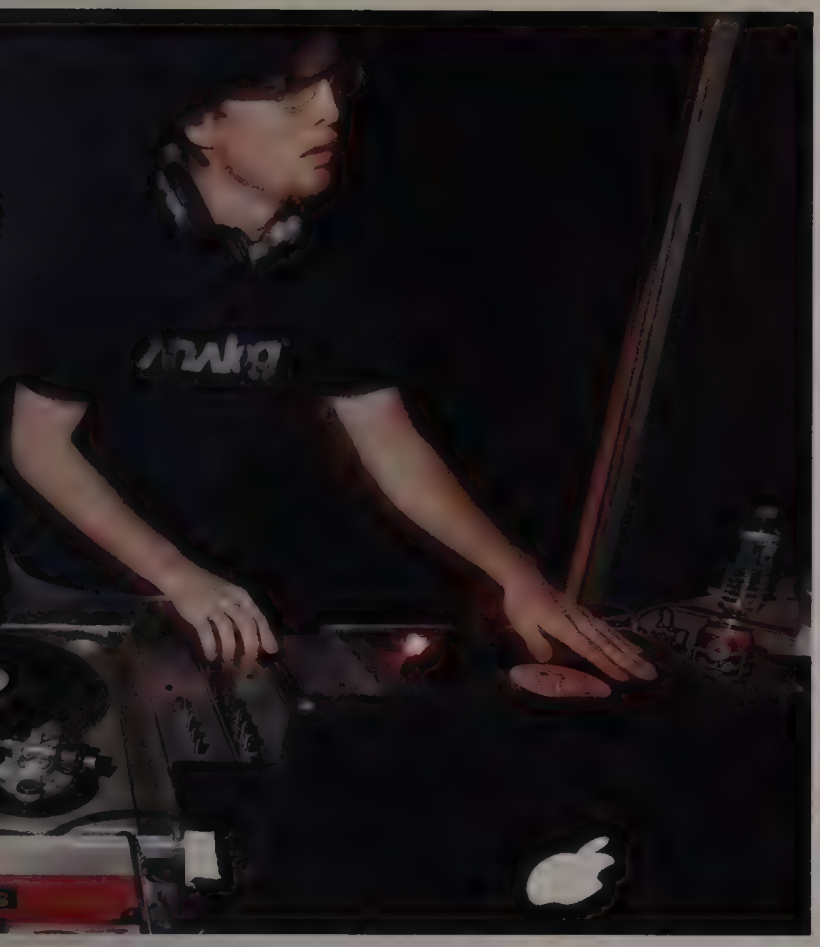
DO YOUR RESEARCH



Head to Mass. Ave.'s Enormous Room on a Monday night and experience the same warm, lounge-y atmosphere it offers on the weekends, but without hordes of barflies. A hole in the brick wall leads to the DJ booth and the heart of Beat Research, offering experimental party music from jungle to dubstep to hip-hop.

Since creating Beat Research in 2004, duo DJ Flack (aka Antony Flackett) and DJ C (aka Jake Trussell) have been traveling and reaching out to music lovers with eclectic taste from New York to Prague. This month marks their third anniversary at the spot above Central Kitchen.

On any given Beat Research night, Flack, of Jamaica Plain, plays familiar pop music and combines it with something more esoteric. For example, he might take the instrumental portion of Kanye West's "Gold Digger" and play it at a fast 45 revolutions per minute. On top of that, he might add a slowed-down "dubby"—a bass-heavy, Jamaican-influenced beat—by Montreal producer Ghislain Poirier.

"Ask a DJ what style they play and they'll say jungle, trance or house," explains C, of Somerville. "We wanted to open it up and introduce people to new styles through the familiar." Blends at Beat Research can range from "Where's Your Head At?" by Basement Jaxx to an instrumental version of Mary J. Blige's "A Family Affair" to Bounti Killa's "Mad Love" before the night is through. One of C's most popular remixes is of Michael Jackson's "Billie Jean" called "Billy Jungle."

"We've been into the idea of multigenre [blends] since the '90s, but it's just now that the whole genre is becoming popular," says Flack. "We'll play super-poppy stuff everyone knows over a track no one has heard." He says Beat Research isn't a lec ture about the coolest music in the world; instead it's a way to xpose people to different sounds. He recently released a track n his Web site, "Beyond the Valley of the Smurfs," that in- udes Buffalo Springfield and Yaggfu Front. The title came from usic he used to listen to as a kid. "When I revisited that cord, I was surprised to find a track that was pretty danceable nd even had an electronic reggae bounce to it," Flack explains.

Like all of Boston's DJs, Flack and C use word-of-mouth and our the Internet for new music to populate their libraries. Beat esearch's Web presence has even earned it international atten- on, resulting in some highly experimental Mondays. "We ave DJs as guests who come from places like London and razil," says Flack. "It's sort of gotten a reputation for being ex- erimental, yet still fun... and that's what people appreciate."

IX AND MASH

reative spinning can take on many different forms—just ompare the crew at Beat Research with those at Mash Ave. lashups, known in Europe as bootlegs, are combinations usually created digitally) of two or more songs. The blended amples often include one song's vocal track over another's instrumental or rhythm track. After gaining popularity in Europe, the first mashup clubs started popping up around the U.S. in 2003.

A little more than two years ago, DJ BC (aka Bob Cronin) and then–local resident Lenlow (aka Luke Enlow), now of New Hampshire, met in an online forum dedicated to mashups and decided to try a night of their own. They eventually found a home at the Independent, and they now spin there every other Friday. Mash Ave has a core of die-hard fans, but the pair is still trying to get the word out. "We get them in and we give them CDs, but it takes a while for people to understand that Mash Ave is a regular thing," says BC. "Now people are starting to dance, which is killer."

Mash Ave can also get quirky, with tracks like Lenlow's "To the Taxmobile!" combining the Batman theme song, the Beatles' "Taxman," Interpol's "PDA" and the Surfaris' "Wipe Out." BC's first mashup layered the vocals of Jay-Z's "Izzo" over Rush's "Tom Sawyer." "It's a little rough, but I still like it," he says.

Two years ago, John Binns of Boston randomly downloaded DJ BC Presents: The Beastles, BC's collections of Beatles and Beastie Boys mashups. "I'm a big fan of the Beastie Boys, and it made me a big fan of DJ BC," recalls Binns. "I'm picky about my music, but I liked everything on that CD." In fact, "Tripper Trouble" (BC's mashup of the Beasties' "Triple Trouble" and the Beatles' "Day Tripper") even scored a mention—and three stars—in Rolling Stone. For Binns, Mash Ave is all he wants it to be. "It doesn't take a lot to get my music fix, and I don't think I need to go any further," he says. "I go there every two weeks and I'm good."

COVER YOUR TRACKS

River Gods on River Street in Cambridge also does its share of recruiting and showcasing cutting-edge DJs. Monday night's Weekly Wax brings in people who've never DJ'ed or who want to try out something new. The events are usually themed -- two DJs recently went head-to-head using only tracks that included cow bells and hand claps. Booker Jeff MacIsaac says he tries to avoid using the same DJ twice, but he'll invite those who shine to play again. "I see DJs who blow my mind with their music and skills.... [Weekly Wax] really makes for an intense revolving door of DJs," he says. "And you can sense the excitement of a DJ trying out something new."

A member of the River Gods DJ family is So Limpa-Amara of Cambridge. She's been spinning there for the past two years and currently hosts schiSOphonic on a Friday of every month. Dedicated to free-form and random play, Limpa-Amara calls herself a human jukebox, and while she doesn't mix music, her four-hour slot is filled with everything from Indian hip-hop and R&B to indie-pop and soul. "If you have a really good beat and a good melody, you can get away with anything," she says. "I play all sorts of weird stuff that keeps people on their toes." She's hesitant to admit that Nelly Furtado's "Promiscuous Girl" can find its way into her set, but she's just as likely to include Sebastian Tellier's "La Ritournelle" or a track from Mib Roadshow's Desi Inferno, too. "A hip-hop head might tell me that he really liked a song I played, and I love to tell him it was orchestral music," she laughs.

SCHOOL OF SCRATCH

For music lovers interested in hitting the books, Flack teaches a class at Mass. College of Art, also called Beat Research. "People are so psyched to have a forum for getting into DJ'ing," says Flack. "There's always a waiting list."

DJ Rndm (pronounced "Random"), aka Todd Robertson, took Flack's class and later spun off in his own direction. "I was blown away that I could take a class with turntables and learn about the art of sampling and DJ culture," says Rndm. And at the end of each semester, students in the class have an opportunity to guest-DJ at Beat Research and test out their spinning skills. "From scratching to mixing to juggling records, it's a great proving ground."

Rndm is a sucker for a live blend or mashup. Both live and recorded mashups involve laying one track over another and matching beats, but live mashups require a different DJ style. "It's more of a performance, and there are more consequences," says Rndm. "It could all go to hell." But he's quick to acknowledge that DJs like BC and C, who often use recorded mashups, are simply different kinds of artists. "Everyone has their own way of doing it," offers Rndm. "BC is more about the research, and I'm more performance-oriented."

TRY IT OUT

Like the music itself, those who come out to listen are an eclectic group, and the DJs work hard to cultivate e-mail lists and encourage repeat attendance. These Boston DJs don't guarantee you'll love everything they play or encourage you to abandon the club scene altogether. But at least now when you hear Fergie's "Glamorous" for the third time in one night, you have somewhere to turn. iB

VALEDICTORIAN ENERGY

This I Believe*, a collection of personal philosophies heard on WGBH radio, is edited by Dan Gediman and Jay Allison, who founded several radio stations in Massachusetts. You can submit your own beliefs to: www.thisibelieve.org.

The title of this series, first aired in the 1950s, suggests a tone of such daunting rectitude that surely only someone as worthy as Eleanor Roosevelt could've penned such orations. Indeed, hers is in here. Many of these beliefs, epiphanies and resoundingly up-high values are delivered by the mighty. Colin Powell says, "I believe in America," which he links to the opportunities his immigrant parents found here. Equally admirable is Dr. Anthony Fauci, an AIDS researcher who vows to "serve humankind" while also honoring the anxiety that motivates him. But less gigantic people also proffer their principles and discoveries, sometimes smaller, sweeter or forged in the fires of crisis. Cecile Gilmer, whose mother killed herself, was taken in by a friend's family when she was living with her father at a motel and treated as a complete member of that incidentally adopting family. The mere "power of presence" that helpers radiated to Katrina victims, more "being" than "doing," proved most powerful to Debbie Hall. In a twistier mode, Penn Jillette attributes to his atheism some good things that others believe belong to God. And psychologist Kay Redfield Jamison tips her hat to the positive power of the "jagged edges" and the dark side.

BUZZING BEADS AND CLICKING NEEDLES

Spark (50 Grove St., Somerville; 617-718-9132; www.sparkcrafts.com), an upscale crafts studio in Davis Square, offers classes, tools, workshops and craft parties like Girls' Night Out.

Move over, Oprah: Crafting together may be bigger than book groups. Coming into this inviting and exciting converted industrial building—all colors and skylights—you feel that creative tingle produced by beautiful yarn and scintillating dishes of sugary-looking, brightly colored beads for jewelry-making. There's also that humming surge of sociability among the shoppers and workshoppers who come here, knitted into homey togetherness, to take classes, work on their own or shop for supplies. Solo, you can also have an $8 day pass that gives you access to studio space. Beads, including Swarovski crystals, "findings" (bite-sized appurtenances) and neck-and-shoulder–shaped molds for arranging your evolving necklace are all here. One of the studio's arresting stones might dramatically anchor a necklace, or you could concoct a twisty-wire necklace sprinkled with a dizzy constellation of sparkly beads and dots. Knitting supplies include inexpensive, colorful lion wool for beginners, up through merino wools from Uruguay with subtle, moody variegations, or self-striped wools that knit in complexity. Spark's expert staff members both teach classes (gather your gang for a shower or other knitter's click-fest) and amend the occasional dropped stitch. Making cards with dye-cut punches, ribbons and all manner of doodads combines old-school fun with professional production.

BABY NEEDS SWEET THINGS

Bird by Bird (1361 Cambridge St., Cambridge; 617-497-1361), a new children's clothing store in Inman Square, is equipped with a small play area.

Bypass the commercialism and Elmo-saturation of malls by swaddling your maternal heart in this pretty shop decorated in sunny blue. A different aesthetic prevails here—calmer and classier, but also more hip. The brick walls are hung with T-shirts printed in subtle, artsy colors; some are even black, showing classic cars (like the Charger and Duster) and images of Bruce Lee or Marilyn Monroe. Other unusual tops include one autumnally splashed with leaves, while another displays a vivid London double-decker bus. Bird by Bird has soothing chenille robes in pink or red, for both nursing mamas and size-6 girls. Chenille also appears in hats, some fitting both generations. The store also solves the problem of fugitive socks and gloves by offering them in packs of three, deliberately mismatched, to multiply the possibilities exponentially. Reversible Appaman-brand vests are named for the designer's childhood imaginary ape-pal. One very refined navy wool sweater understates its point, showing two little red socks. Shoes, boots and some mad zebra-furry sneakers are available. Classes will be held to teach parents of newborns to use the baby semaphore of simple sign language, and baby photo opportunities are coming soon.

THE SPICE IS RIGHT

Mela brings an upscale touch to Indian fare in the South End.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

Fresh from a two-week trip to India, I was delighted when someone called to my attention a promising new Indian restaurant in the South End. Mela, in the small storefront space that housed Hamersley's when it first opened and the Nightingale more recently, combines a handsome physical setting with exciting, superb food and warm, accommodating hospitality. Had I eaten as consistently well in India as on my visits to Mela, I would have tried to extend my visit indefinitely.

Mela is owned and operated by One World Cuisine, a restaurant empire extending from Jamaica Plain to Cambridge. Until the opening of Mela, Mantra (in the Ladder District) was the crown jewel of this empire. Mantra's relatively new chef, Anupam Joglekar, now splits his time between Mela and Mantra. The exotic flavors and aromas that he and his staff coax out of the first-rate ingredients in Mela's dishes, along with the carefully engineered, mouth-pleasing textures of those ingredients, will make it difficult to return to the relative ordinariness of so much restaurant food that aims for the lowest common denominator.

Studio Luz Architects has transformed Mela's space into an eye-pleasing venue. Translucent, red-orange silk draperies screen its storefront windows across from a wall paneled in gleaming sheet-copper. Ornate Hindu temple carvings and colorful photos of India decorate the end walls of the larger dining room, while in the smaller, a six-stool bar and flat-screen TV coexist with tables for about 10 diners. White, spherical, hanging light fixtures, constructed of plastic strips configured like ribbon candy, resemble closed lotus blossoms. My only design quibble at Mela was with the table dimensions, which didn't easily accommodate the dinner plates and glassware along with all the condiments, bread baskets and serving dishes that accompany a proper Indian meal. Even with undersized tables, Mela seats fewer than 50 in all.

Mela's two-sided menu listed almost 100 offerings. While we contemplated our choices, the waiter brought gratis appetizers: a medley of sauces one night, a small vegetable samosa on another. Hot appetizers included chicken tikka ($8), kebabs of chicken breast that had been marinated in garlic, spices and yogurt and cooked in a tandoor oven to a juicy, tender turn. Chicken pakoras ($6) were boneless strips cut from chicken breasts, battered with besan (chickpea flour) and deep fried until they were crispy on the outside and moist within. The nonvegetarian platter ($13) included chicken tikka, chicken pakoras, a meat samosa (a fried turnover stuffed with minced lamb), lamb kebabs and a seekh kebab. The latter kebab, a small segment of skewered sausage, was more moist and flavorful than the lamb filling in the samosa and not as tough as the rare-cooked lamb kebabs. While the platter was an economical way to sample these starters, their service together on a small, crowded plate may have made them cooler and less fresh than they would have been if ordered individually, and the accompanying dipping sauces (including a delicious mint chutney) seemed sparse.

Moving to the main courses, every one we chose turned out to be memorably delectable. From the "Modern India" category on the menu, the subz panchmael ($16) brought a bowl of colorful, flavorful, marvelously firm vegetables including artichoke hearts, asparagus, bean sprouts, multicolored peppers, summer squash, carrots, tomatoes and onions, all coated with panch phoron, a traditional Bengali five-spice combination of fenugreek, nigella, mustard, fennel and cumin seed sautéed in ghee (clarified butter). The result, a preparation somewhere between a casserole and a salad, showcased the hauntingly beautiful flavors that classic Indian spices can create, just hot enough to make it provocative without obscuring the flavor of the underlying ingredients. Another "Modern India" selection, duck jalfrazi ($19), featured tender chunks of boneless duck tossed with summer squash, eggplant, green peas, onions and mushrooms, and was spiced medium-hot. Shrimp do-piaza ($21), about 10 large, roasted shrimp, came accompanied by red and yellow peppers, onions, mushrooms and tomatoes, and benefited from a nuanced combination of spices that prominently featured coriander.

The less assertively spiced butter chicken ($16) brought pieces of boneless chicken breast in a rich sauce of yogurt, butter and cream seasoned with ginger, garlic, cinnamon, cloves, cardamom and cumin—a subtle blend enlivened with lime juice. Equally soothing on the palate, lamb saag ($17) consisted of boneless lamb chunks simmered in an exquisite sauce of chopped spinach, garlic, onions, cumin and other spices. With its haunting flavor and delightful aroma, Mela's lamb saag ranked with the best of those I tasted in India. Lamb made a number of other appearances on Mela's menu as well, not least notably in the barrah baluchi ($18). Three thick, succulent and tender loin lamb chops and an additional hunk of boneless lamb cut from the leg—a carnivore's delight—arrived on a long rectangular platter. Two sauces accompanied the dish: A white yogurt sauce was cool and refreshing; while the red sauce was warm, rich and complex in the interplay of its herbs and spices, like an Italian ragout kicked up a notch. A small bowl of dal (stewed lentils), which often serves as a mild, cooling counterpoint to the spicier parts of an Indian meal, came on the side. The other lamb preparation, lamb biryani ($16), ranked as one of the best rice dishes I've ever eaten. Aromatic basmati rice cooked with chunks of boneless lamb, Mela's lamb biryani delivered an engaging kaleidoscope of tastes and textures: tender, succulent lamb, al dente squash, velvety peppers and crunchy nuts, evidencing a fine hand on the spices and the painstaking, multistep process required to create this complex and satisfying treat. While a credible Italian risotto can be produced in an intensive half hour at the stove (as long as the chef has a rich stock on hand), a proper biryani takes much more time, patience and attention to detail. Mela's lamb biryani made the best of risottos seem one-dimensional by contrast.

Chef Anupam Jogiekar

Indian restaurants offer an array of breads, most made from wheat. An order of garlic naan ($4) brought a basket of puffy, tandoor-roasted bread flavored with garlic and butter. Aloo naan ($5) added a potato-and-pea stuffing to the basic naan, making it almost a meal in itself. The peshawari naan came stuffed with dried fruits, shredded coconut and potatoes, resulting in a spicy-sweet change of pace. Chapati ($4) resembled naan but was cooked on a griddle rather than baked in the tandoor, using whole wheat flour and a full array of spices.

Since I've found that Indian food is best complemented by beer (and the wine list seemed pricey to me), I took advantage of Mela's selection of American, European and Indian beers. The Indian brands included Kingfisher ($5) and Taj Mahal ($8 for a 22-ounce bottle), the former a light lager, the latter darker with a more robust flavor. Both went well with the food.

Desserts included badami kulfi ($6), a light-bodied ice cream flavored with saffron and almonds. We ordered one kulfi to share, and the small serving disappeared in a matter of seconds thanks to its unique, exotic flavor. In contrast, the chocolate cake ($6) came in a portion large enough to share among three. More of a tart than a cake, it came in an unremarkable pastry shell, but its cardamom-spiked chocolate intensity made it a rich, satisfying conclusion to our meal.

Despite its small size, Mela had a legion of servers on hand during both of our midweek visits—eager young men whose vigilance and attentiveness brought them tableside in response to the subtlest of gestures. At times they seemed too attentive, making it almost impossible to take notes unnoticed. Their earnestness, however, signified a sincere desire to please. And with such delicious food coming out of Mela's kitchen, pleasing diners was an easy task. IB

Tapas Tempus Fugit

Trio of chefs triple their tapas… Talkin' baseball at Beer Works…

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Like the yellow shirt worn by the leader in the Tour de France, the honor of Top Tapas Chef must be earned anew each year. But unlike at the Tour de France, you—along with all the other diner-judges in the house—will help determine the winner of the second annual Great Tapas Challenge. On March 19, Andy Husbands, chef/owner of Tremont 647 and Sister Sorel, defends the title he won last year, when he bested chefs Gabriel Frasca and Paul O'Connell, against two new challengers: chef Jason Santos of Gargoyles on the Square, and Dante de Magistris, chef/owner of Dante in Cambridge's Royal Sonesta Hotel. Here's how it works: After a sangria reception, the contestants prepare a three-course sit-down dinner of tapas. The first course is chicken, followed by courses of shrimp and beef. Diners award points based on taste, appearance, creativity and overall quality. It's a friendly competition, so where's Andy Husbands' buddy Ed Doyle? "He's the Popcorn King," says Husbands, referring to Doyle's corporate gig as chef for a gourmet popcorn company. "See him in Time magazine soon." Without, it's safe to assume, a popcorn tapas recipe.

Andy Husbands is ready to defend his tapas title March 19.

The Lunch of the Irish?

Actually, it's a dinner, the gala centerpiece of a night of Irish food, drink and culture (sorry, no parades). On March 16, the eve of St. Patrick's Day, the second annual Gaelic Gourmet Gala at Hotel Commonwealth will feature the combined talents of a half-dozen Irish chefs and an equal number of (mostly non-Irish) Boston chefs, including Radius' Michael Schlow, Blue Ginger's Ming Tsai, Pigalle's Marc Orfaly, Andy Husbands, Sasso's David Ross and Eastern Standard's Jamie Bissonnette. But wait, there's more—cooking demonstrations, live jazz and free parking (leprechauns not included). For tickets call 617-532-5063 or visit www.hotelcommonwealth.com/gaelicgourmetgala.

Wine, Women and Winter Wednesdays

Cold weather. Hot restaurant. Add wines at just the right temperature and women just as cool as yourself, and you're enjoying Wine, Women and Winter Wednesdays—a series of events hosted by Radius partner Esti Parsons and Brix Wine Shop owners Carri Wroblewski and Klaudia Mally, aka "The Brix Chix." Your next chance to get in on the action is the "Women Winemakers" event on March 21. Sample Radius fare paired with Brix wines, and pick up some wine wisdom, too.

Fenway Frankly, Don't Give a Damn

Can't get Red Sox tickets? Missing out on the gastro-abomination of the Fenway Frank? Buck up: Boston Beer Works is serving up a roster of baseball-themed menu items in April. As you'd expect, it's mostly decent-sounding dishes with cutesy names—"Green Monster Swordfish" is grilled and topped with pesto, and "Fowl Ball" is barbecued chicken on a baguette—but there are a couple of genuinely wild pitches on deck, too. "Cotton Candy Halibut" is a fish fillet topped with actual cotton candy. And "Cracker Jack" clams are coated with you-know-what before being deep-fried. Allergic to peanuts? Maybe they can make you "Cracker Jill" clams. Or maybe not. IB

Movies: The Short List

Short-feature films get no respect. In fact, the category gets the majority of its exposure as the tiebreaker in company Oscar pools, because no one's actually seen them save for two or three of the most devoted Academy members. This month, you can boost your cinematic IQ and catch every last one of the Oscar-nominated short films at the Institute of Contemporary Art, which will present the nominated live-action and animated shorts back-to-back in three separate screenings. Included are films from Norway, Canada, Australia, Denmark, Spain, Hungary and the U.S., on topics ranging from love and family relationships to adventure. The Dropkick Murphys

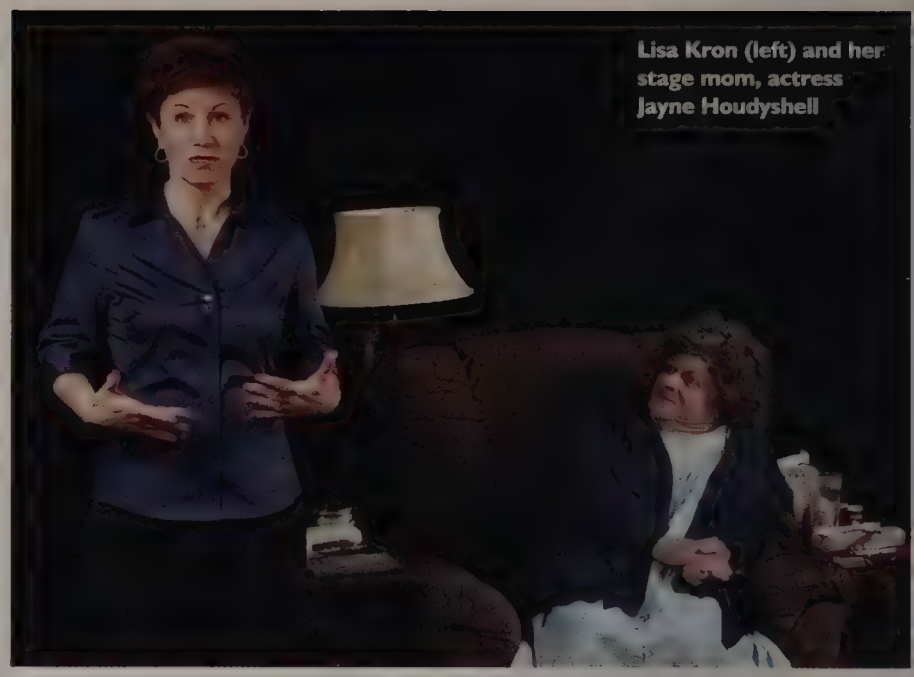
THU.–SUN./MARCH 8–18



Music: Punk o' the Irish

Sure, guzzling green beer and munching on leprechauns may be the traditional way to ring in St. Paddy's, but there's no need to fall into a rut. Mix things up this year and celebrate the day (nay, week) by taking in a wee bit o' arse-kicking Irish rock. The Pogues come to town March 8–11, bringing with them a sampling of their traditional Irish punk classics from the '80s and '90s. And on March 16, 17 and 18, hometown boys the Dropkick Murphys are back for three shows plus their annual Acoustic Charity Breakfast/pre-parade concert and party in Dorchester. Given their recent spike in celebrity—their song "I'm Shipping Up to Boston" was featured in The Departed and earned a spot on Rolling Stone's list of top songs for 2006—it's a homecoming not to be missed. The Pogues: March 8-10, Avalon Ballroom, 15 Lansdowne St., Boston (617-262-2424); March 11, Orpheum Theatre, 1 Hamilton Place, Boston (617-679-0810). The Dropkick Murphys: March 16 and 18, 6 pm, Avalon Ballroom; March 17, 2 pm, Agganis Arena, 925 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-353-4628); March 18, 9 am, IBEW Hall, 256 Freeport St., Dorchester (617-456-3710). Call for prices. —LPK

THU./MARCH 8

CityScope: The Lunar the Better

It's the Year of the Pig, folks! But even if you weren't born in 1971, 1983 or 1995, you can still ring in the dawn of another Chinese New Year in piggy (but not boar-ing) style at the Asian American Civic Association's annual Lunar New Year Gala. The event features an open bar, live music, dancing, theatrical performances, and live and silent auctions. And 40 local Asian restaurants, including Ming Tsai's Blue Ginger, ensure that you'll be more stuffed than a generous dumpling while you enjoy the night's entertainment. All proceeds benefit the AACA, which, among other things, helps new Asian immigrants flourish in the United States. CitiWang Center, 270 Tremont St., Boston (617-426-9492). www.aaca-boston.org. MBTA: Green Line to Boylston. 7-11 pm. $150. —RL

Performing Arts: Well Worth It

To make a hilarious play about the complex and often strained mother-daughter relationship takes some serious writing chops. Playwright Lisa Kron has done just that in her comedy Well, which comes to the Hub fresh from its Tony-nominated and critically acclaimed Broadway run. Kron—who also stars in the show as a daughter with a chronically ill mother—slips in high-minded commentary about everything from maternal control issues and hypochondria to racism and universal health concerns, but you'll be too busy cracking up to notice. Boston University Theatre, 264 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-266-0800). March 9-April 8. Tue.-Thu., 7:30 pm; Wed., 2 pm; Fri., 8 pm; Sat., 2 and 8 pm; Sun., 2 pm. $15-$75. —RL

TUE./MARCH 13

CityScope: Affordable Edibles

With so many great eateries in the South End, it can be tough to decide where to go on any given Friday night—French or Italian? Tapas or Ethiopian? New American or Middle Eastern? On March 13, however, you don't have to choose. To benefit the AIDS Action Committee, 40 of the neighborhood's restaurants, like Hamersley's, Toro, the Butcher Shop, Aquitaine, Pho Republique and even the soon-to-open Rocca, will converge on the Boston Center for the Arts for Taste of the South End, offering samples of their signature savory dishes. Meanwhile, Finale, Appleton Bakery and Flour Bakery + Café, among others, will serve up the sweet treats that've earned them a following. If you want to go whole hog, spring for VIP tickets that give you access to the chef's reception at 6 pm and the afterparty at 10:30, just down the block at Hamersley's. Cyclorama, Boston Center for the Arts, 539 Tremont St., Boston. www.aac.org. 6:30-9 pm. $95, general admission; $200, VIP admission. —LPK

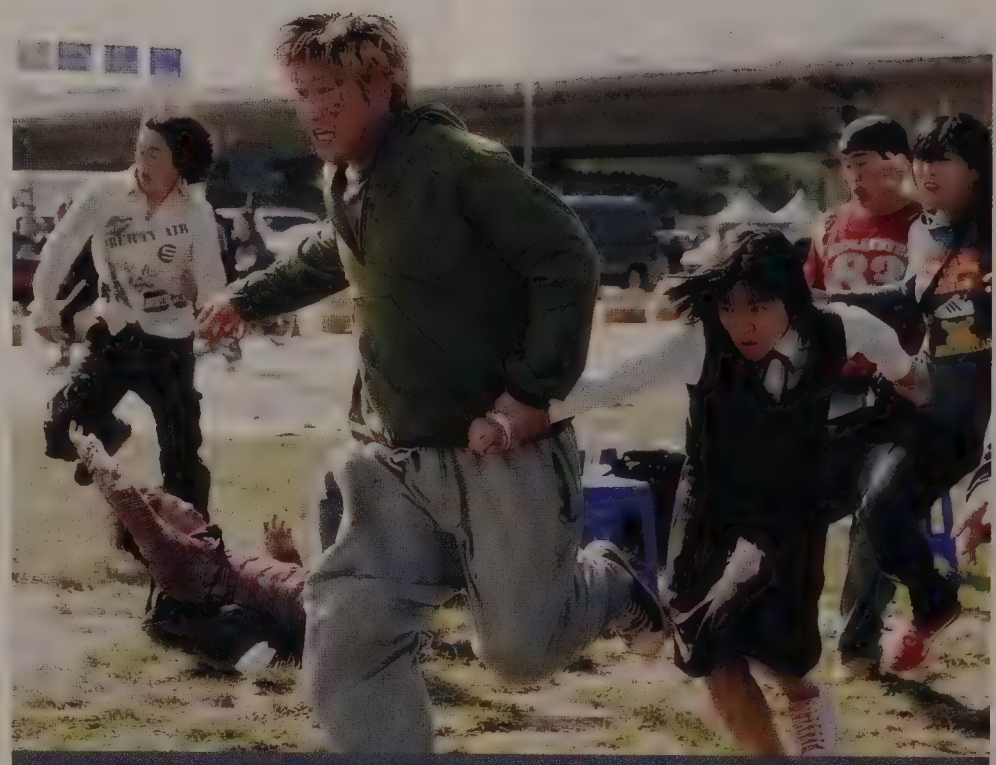
MOVIES



Hole in Our Seoul

Finally, a giant-lizard movie for our time.

BY SEAN BURNS

"What a waste of money!" somebody hissed in the direction of the screen last month at the Kendall Square Cinema, right after we all saw a trailer for The Host and shortly before Miss Potter began.

I guess some folks must already know beforehand what they'll think about a movie they haven't seen... which is too bad for them, I guess. Because Bong Joon-ho's The Host—part Friday-night-monster-movie, part dysfunctional family saga, with a healthy dollop of misanthropic social satire tossed into the mix—is a seriously funny, frighteningly relevant, altogether smashingly entertaining riff on our contemporary fears and anxieties.

Song Kang-ho (left) and Ko Ah-sung run for their lives in Bong Joon-ho's The Host.

It's the movie War of the Worlds could've been if Spielberg hadn't chickened out halfway through, and it's very much a keeper, no matter what the noisy audience might have to say about the coming attractions.

We begin at a U.S. Army base in South Korea, where a well-meaning lackey is ordered in no uncertain terms to dump a few toxic chemicals down a drain that leads to the Han River. (A few snarky folks claim this movie is based on a true story, but this happens to be the one and only scene grounded in fact.)

Some strange stuff happens on the riverside for a few years after that, but nothing gets too out of control until one random, uneventful sunny afternoon, when a gigantic 50-foot lizard suddenly appears, sunning itself as it hangs by its tail from a bridge.

If Jaws taught us anything, it's that any filmmaker worth his salt is supposed to keep the monster hidden for as long as possible to keep the suspense brewing. The Host dispenses with that conventional wisdom, offering a long, loving view of this sleeping giant straight out of the gate. It's a weird, reptilian thing, a tortoise-like version of H.R. Geiger's original Alien.

Contemporary folks also don't quite react with the reverence you'd expect for something like Jaws or that bigshot Alien. The Host's bored passersby all toss garbage at the creature and try to take cool camera-phone photos... until the damn thing wakes up and starts eating them.

A 21st century Gojira riff, The Host offers no shortage of absurdly entertaining mash-and-stomp set-pieces, but this director k... ws a thing or two about mixing up genres. His too-little seen ...ories of Murder (2004) was stuck halfway between a police ...cedural and an absurdist comedy, and so now The Host plays ...t of like something that'd happen if Godzilla had attacked The Royal Tenenbaums.

Blond haired, thick-witted Gang-du (Song Kang-ho) wants only the best for his daughter Hyeon-su (Ko Ah-sung), but he's still living in a failing fast-food stand with his father, Hie-bong (Byeon Hie-bong), a recovering alcoholic who feels guilty for neglecting the poor kid during his formative years. (It's strongly suggested that Gang-du is mentally handicapped, and during the later reels he endures a lobotomy with shockingly few lingering consequences.)

It's only after Hyeon-su is kidnapped and trapped in this creature's blood- and entrail-ridden lair that this family truly comes back together, with resentful overachiever Nam-il (Park Hae-il) and professional archer Nam-joo (Bae Du-na) joining in for an exciting, emotionally cathartic, and all around disastrous rescue mission.

Bae will be familiar to Brattle patrons as the protagonist of the extraordinary recent rave Linda Linda Linda, which is still far and away the best movie I've seen this year. The gawky, deadpan comedic treasure can somehow elicit bales of laughter merely by standing still and looking perturbed, so it goes without saying that her bow-hunting interactions with the giant lizard-beast are almost too priceless for words. (Jim Jarmusch needs to write her a starring role right now; it could be his penance for unleashing Roberto Benigni onto an unsuspecting world.)

The Host ramps up into Dr. Strangelove territory once America gets involved, and Bong scores some seriously unpleasant, well-timed jabs as our government chooses to ignore the actual monster and instead spends a lot of time, money and lives chasing a phantom menace of our own creation.

(If you don't understand what he's getting at here, perhaps somebody should draw you a map. But trust me, it's not very flattering.)

This is a very smart, prickly film—toying endlessly with our expectations from this allegedly disreputable genre and pulling personal and political conclusions that'd never be expected from a giant-lizard picture.

The Host is many things—funny, sad, angry, overlong and confounding—but it's most assuredly not a waste of money, no matter what that imbecile at the Kendall might've yelled. iB

The Host ★★★ 1/2

Directed by Bong Joon-ho. Written by Baek Chul-hyun, Bong Joon-ho and Ha Jun-won. With Son Kang-ho, Byeon Hie-bong, Park Hae-il, Bae Du-na and Ko Ah-sung. Opens March 9 at Kendall Square.

Because I Said So ★

This smutty, headache-inducing calamity wastes th formidable comedic talents of Diane Keaton, whi ping her into a nattering, nails-on-a-blackboa frenzy as an overbearing single mother secretly aud tioning suitors for her wallflower youngest (Mand Moore). Keaton picks out a suave, jerky architec (Tom Everett Scott), while Moore discovers re happiness with a poorly dressed, down-on-his-luc guitar player (Gabriel Macht). One of those movi that would be over in 10 minutes if anybody o screen were capable of behaving like a ration adult, Because I Said So piles on so many noi crossed signals, misunderstandings and nonsens that by the time Keaton's character loses her voic it feels like a blessing. Lauren Graham and Pip Perabo round out the family, who loudly discuss a sorts of inappropriate sexual matters in crowde restaurants and shopping malls. Misleadingly ma keted as a family comedy, this movie has more no stop talk about orgasms and male genitalia than a entire season of Sex and the City. Yuck. (At Bosto Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Blood Diamond ★★

Director Edward Zwick, who started out as a cocr ator of the TV show thirtysomething before movin into bloated, preachy spectacles such as Courag Under Fire and The Last Samurai, makes actio movies for guilty liberals. Trying to swaddle his relen less message-mongering in slick Hollywood cliché Zwick often comes up with the worst of both world big-budget adventures that grind to a halt every 1 minutes to lecture you. Blood Diamond should've bee a corker, as the Sierra Leone diamond massacres the late 1990s are rich with cinematic possibilitie and Leonardo DiCaprio delivers a surprisingly co vincing, charismatic performance as a scummy smu gler taking advantage of a noble mine slave (Djimo Hounsou, who's played so many slaves in movi since starring in Amistad, he could probably perfor Roots as a one-man show by now) to chase a pink di mond the size of a golf ball. Alas, Zwick squande this promising setup with a devastating lack of fo ward momentum. Every scene runs at least twice long as it needs to, and Zwick's pompous, self-co sciously prestigious tone negates the story's gritty u gency. (At Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Breach ★★★

The tale of traitor Robert Hanssen is a fascinatin often embarrassing chunk of recent history, brought the big screen with surprising emotional texture an fine attention to detail by writer-director Billy Ray. poker-faced and seething Chris Cooper carries himse with an almost overwrought rigidity, signaling unto tempests behind his eyes. In Cooper's brilliantly phys cal interpretation of the character, Hanssen's abrup ness and fanatical Catholicism appear to be the on things keeping untold demons in check. He's a vo cano ready to blow. Ryan Phillippe holds his own as cocky junior agent in over his head, placed front ar center for a massive FBI sting operation. Shatter Glass director Ray has a real knack for portrayir adults roaming the corridors of power; white-collar i trigue suits him. But for all his formidable gifts when comes to character and performance, his visual tech nique falls somewhere in the vicinity of boring comp tence. Ray doesn't seem to think in pictures, and the end, unforgettable images are what separate th great movies from good ones. (At Boston Commo Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Breaking and Entering ★★

Best known for big-budget adaptations such as Th English Patient and Cold Mountain, writer-direct Anthony Minghella helms his first original scree play since 1991's Truly, Madly, Deeply. Unfort nately, this convoluted tale of a brooding Londo architect (Jude Law) looking for love in all th wrong places is awash in so much overwrought lite ary symbolism, you can be forgiven for assuming th it too was awkwardly culled from a best-seller. jumble of mismatched relationships and dronir speechifying about globalization and the mode class divide, Breaking and Entering finds Law torn b tween his icy Swedish girlfriend (Robin Wrigh Penn) and Juliette Binoche's battle-scarred Bosni refugee. Obviously conceived with the best inte tions, this handsomely mounted production fee soggy and predetermined. Minghella's characters a more like walking position papers, too self-conscio of what they're supposed to be representing in th movie's ideological chessboard. The only signs of li are found in the margins, with fine bit parts fro Ray Winstone as a seen-it-all cop and The Departe Vera Farmiga as a scene-stealing Russian prostitut (At Harvard Square.)

Children of Men ★★★★
My pick for the best picture of 2006, Alfonso Cuarón's Children of Men is the kind of movie you only thought they didn't make anymore. A ruthless, angrily politicized piece of speculative science fiction that conveniently doubles as an edge-of-your-seat chase thriller, the film uses a dark vision of the future to critique the way we're living right now. As in the best sci-fi, the film feels more topically and emotionally keyed into our current, uneasy cultural moment than any present-tense tale possibly could. In a frighteningly believable future London after a worldwide infertility crisis has sent civilization into a violent tailspin, Clive Owen gives a magnificent old-school Humphrey Bogart performance, shepherding humanity's last hope through a bombed-out battleground and rediscovering depths of compassion and valor he forgot he even had. Cuarón and his brilliant cinematographer, Emmanuel Lubezki, have rewritten the rules of the action film, shooting exclusively with available light and in a succession of long, miraculously unbroken camera movements, thus lending a nerve-wracking real-time anxiety to the proceedings. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Days of Glory ★★★
One of this year's Academy Award nominees for Best Foreign Language Film, writer-director Rachid Bouchareb's affecting drama sticks largely to the tried-and-true genre conventions of the WWII platoon movie, but with one surprising, very important twist. Chronicling the long-marginalized efforts of France's North African regiments, the film seeks to honor soldiers who were treated as second-class citizens by the very homeland they put their lives on the line to defend. Denied rations or opportunities granted to the regular French army, the Arab battalions fought just as hard and bled just as badly, but with no recognition or reward. Bouchareb follows four young grunts of varying degrees of idealism through a somewhat generic, episodic trek during the fight for France's liberation. There are strong performances throughout, and during the battles the film makes the best of what appears to be a limited budget. What stays with you long after the closing credits is the film's outrage that brave young men died for an illusory notion of liberty, equality and fraternity. (At Kendall Square.)

Factory Girl ★
Arguably the first person to become famous for being famous, junkie-socialite and Andy Warhol–muse Edie Sedgwick receives the fawning biopic treatment here, despite having done nothing of interest in her lifetime besides looking fabulous. A monument to vapidity, director George Hickenlooper's incoherent period piece recasts the Warhol factory scene as a muddled mess of Campbell's Soup cans and incessant name-dropping. Memento star Guy Pearce does a halfway-decent Warhol impression, but there's little for him to play besides the fey mannerisms and monotone bons mots we've seen a thousand times before. As Sedgwick, tabloid staple Sienna Miller throws herself into a role that doesn't really exist on the page. Bob Dylan's lawyers have been making a lot of noise in the press, with good reason. The singer, laughably portrayed here by Hayden Christensen (Star Wars' adenoidal Anakin), falls for Edie in a completely fictional love triangle that would come off as slanderous were it not so unintentionally funny. I guess the film's good practice for the inevitable Paris Hilton biography. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Ghost Rider ★½
Writer-director Mark Steven Johnson made such an unholy mess of the greatest Daredevil story Frank Miller ever wrote, it's no surprise that he's all thumbs again, adapting the Marvel Comics' très 1970s fusion of Goth postures and redneck rockin' that could've only flourished when an entire generation worshipped Evel Knievel. Ghost Rider gets a bumpy update to the X-Games era, with Nicolas Cage turning in his most off-the-charts crazy-pants performance in eons as Johnny Blaze, a stunt-biker who sold his soul to the devil (Peter Fonda, naturally) and thus finds himself staring down a trenchcoat mafia full of undead teenagers. The flick's central conceit is way out of whack, as whenever Cage's superpowers kick in the actor's freakazoid facial expressions are replaced by a laughably unconvincing, computer-generated flaming skull. There's simply no way bargain-basement F/X could ever compete with the apoplectic weirdness of an untethered Nic Cage, talking in "his Elvis voice" while sipping jellybeans out of a martini glass and grooving to the soothing sounds of the Carpenters. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Letters From Iwo Jima ★★★★
Originally intended as a bookend to last October's flawed-but-worthy Flags of Our Fathers, Letters From Iwo Jima emerges as something far stronger, more unprecedented—perhaps even revolutionary. Only an American icon like Clint Eastwood could get away with making a WWII battle epic told from the losing side's point of view. (In Japanese with English subtitles, no less!) The filmmaking is spare and elegant. Tom Stern's washed-out cinematography drains the color from the frame, save for sharp stabs of crimson blood. The soundtrack offers a mournful piano dirge wherever lesser directors would opt for full orchestral bombast. But what'll stay with you for days afterward are those long, unbearable passages of time cramped in dark, frightening tunnels, racked by the distant thunder of explosions, as these frightened young men are left with nothing to contemplate but their own impending demise. Eastwood never once questions the necessity of this war; he seeks only to illuminate its cost, which in the hands of such a sensitive filmmaker becomes almost too horrible to bear. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Lives of Others ★★★½
Turns out East Berlin wasn't such a nice place to live in 1984, a year presumably chosen with a wink and a smile by first-time writer-director Florian Henckel Von Donnersmark as the setting for this eerily quiet, breathtakingly suspenseful yarn. Ulrich Muhe delivers a performance of brilliant restraint and control as a ruthless Stasi true believer, suddenly discovering glimmers of a long-dormant conscience when assigned to shadow a fundamentally decent playwright (Powers Boothe look-alike Sebastian Koch) who just might be aiding and abetting some subversive pals during those dark days before the wall came crumbling down. Reminiscent of Francis Ford Coppola's The Conversation, The Lives of Others is all clammy paranoia and creeping dread, with Muhe's poker-faced turn somehow giving you everything and nothing at the same time. It's riveting stuff, watching a man discover just how badly his ideals have been twisted and perverted by power-mongering thugs in high places; enough to carry you through this otherwise crisp, understated picture's weird determination to offer more false endings than The Return of the King. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Music and Lyrics ★★★
Watching Hugh Grant in a romantic comedy these days is sort of like seeing Michael Jordan playing basketball in his prime—there's just such an effortless command and mastery of form it's easy to take the guy for granted. Grant swooshes at least four-dozen one-liners in this unexpectedly delightful music industry send-up, starring as a washed-up 1980s pop icon transparently based on "the other guy" from Wham! After years of touring amusement parks and high school reunions, the rump-shaking cad gets a shot at a big-time comeback thanks to the adoration of a prebald Britney-ish pop tart, but Hugh needs scatterbrained "plant lady" Drew Barrymore to write the lyrics for his music. I guess you could call it all predictable chick-flick rom-com stuff, helmed with little visual distinction by writer-director Marc Lawrence. But, at the same time, Grant and Barrymore are simply, wonderfully adorable, hanging back and doing what they're best at. The bubblegum ditties, by Fountains of Wayne's Adam Schlesinger, are the most infectiously hummable movie tunes I've heard since Schlesinger's own "That Thing You Do!" (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Norbit ★★½
Lewd, crude and undeniably funny, Eddie Murphy's latest lowbrow, fat-suit romp has sent audiences home in stitches while more sensible critics have been treating it like the death of modern culture. Truth is, it's a rather slapdash affair, directed with no particular style by former Head of the Class co-star Brian Robbins, who seems to think that over-lighting the heck out of everything on a fake-looking studio back-lot will somehow pass for competent filmmaking. A shame, as the screenplay (co-authored by Murphy and his brother Charlie) is quite a fractured fable, recklessly sending up decades-worth of stereotypes in a deliberately artificial, small-town setting. Murphy pulls triple duty here, playing not just the title nebbish, but also an elderly Chinese fellow, as well as the gargantuan gal of nobody's dreams. As usual, Murphy is never more at home than when buried under mountains of prosthetic genius Rick Baker's makeup. He brings an astonishing amount of detail, specificity and pathos to these outré caricatures, finding slivers of humanity in even the most grotesque of disguises. (At Boston Common, Kendall and in the suburbs.)

Notes on a Scandal ★★★½
This deliciously catty cup of arsenic-laced tea gives Dame Judi Dench her meatiest role in ages, starring as an acerbic, secretly needy schoolmarm spinster with a crush on Cate Blanchett's willowy, in-over-her-head art teacher. Adapted by acid-tongued playwright Patrick Marber from a novel by Zoe Heller, Notes on a Scandal is a viciously hilarious British piss-take on our own Mary Kay Letourneau saga. After Dench spies Blanchett rolling around the art-studio floor with a 15-year-old soccer hooligan, the cutthroat wench tries spinning the situation to her benefit in this twisted tale of emotional blackmail. The story is told through Dench's unintentionally revealing diary entries, read in a pitch-perfect voice-over by the actress while the Philip Glass score provides an ironically comic counterpoint. Director Richard Eyre (who worked with Dench in Iris) maintains a brisk pace with a minimum of fuss. Blanchett has never been so achingly vulnerable, and Dame Judi is simply a talons-bared delight. Very naughty, but a lot of fun. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Sebastian Koch and Martina Gedeck assume they're alone in The Lives of Others. They're not.

Pan's Labyrinth ★★★½
This boldly original grown-up fairy tale from visionary writer-director Guillermo del Toro boasts images of both shocking horror and stark, elemental beauty. In the dark days just after the Spanish Civil War, troubled, unwanted young Ofelia (the extraordinary Ivana Baquero) copes with awful circumstances by escaping into an imaginary dreamland full of fairies and folk legends that subtly reflect and refract the trauma of her harsh, day-to-day experiences. In other words, imagine Alice suffering under Franco's regime, and falling down a politically and metaphorically freighted rabbit hole into a Wonderland of teeth-gnashing monsters. The underrated auteur behind such eye-popping treats as Blade 2 and Hellboy, del Toro has a distinctive personal vision and a unique visual signature, qualities that for years have gone unheralded, thanks to the intelligentsia's snooty disdain for the horror genre. Besides offering sights that'll linger long in your dreams, Pan's Labyrinth includes a memorably terrifying performance from With a Friend Like Harry's Sergi Lopez, and a warm, heroic turn from Y Tu Mamá También star Maribel Verdu. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Smokin' Aces ★½
Feeling like the worst movie of 1998, Narc writer-director Joe Carnahan's unfunny bloodbath might work for some viewers as nostalgia for that dark era of witless Tarantino knockoffs like Mad Dog Time, The Boondock Saints and Things to Do in Denver When You're Dead, but for the rest of us it's an unwelcome reminder of what a drag it was to watch indie movies in the wake of Pulp Fiction. Stretching True Romance's climactic hotel room massacre out to a full two hours, this empty-headed festival of macho posturing sends dozens of strenuously quirky hit men out to whack Jeremy Piven's coked-up stool pigeon. It's a lot of washed-up actors like Ben Affleck, Ray Liotta and Andy García shouting obscenities and overacting with their neck muscles, and Carnahan edits like he's got ants in his pants. Confused and tone-deaf, the movie expects us to find some deaths tragic but others side-splittingly hysterical. It's tough to figure out who you're supposed to be weeping for when a chainsaw murder is played for cheap comic laughs. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Venus ★★★½
Stubborn, foppish legend of stage and screen Peter O'Toole has found his ideal swan song in Venus, Roger Michell's big-hearted and filthy-minded examination of one fussy lion who isn't quite ready for winter. O'Toole gives an extraordinary performanc as a worn-out actor who becomes erotically fixate on Jodie Whittaker's vulgar, beer-bellied, 20-som thing nursemaid. Their fumbling parody of courtship is fascinating because of all the pat resol tions and expected homilies that Michell an screenwriter Hanif Kurieshi so studiously avoid. Fee ing at times like a rebuttal to the polished cutesine of those Grumpy Old Men movies, Venus has few r mantic notions about growing old. The movie packed with prostate exams, catheters and toena clippings, always forcefully upfront about the fa that the aging process often consists of one indigni after another. An early sight gag finds the act springing from a television studio deathbed, firing u a smoke and happily, loudly cursing. It's a blissful li tle moment that somehow encapsulates this cur ously affecting film: lewd misbehavior as a life forc (At Harvard Square and West Newton.)

Stairways to Heaven

Acoustic acts Uncle Earl and Rodrigo y Gabriela string an offbeat connection.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

The Mexican metal-meets-flamenco duo Rodrigo y Gabriela and the all-female string band Uncle Earl blaze acoustic trails apart from the pop norm. But the two groups also share unlikely connections to hard-rock godfathers Led Zeppelin.

Uncle Earl, which performs at Club Passim March 12, engaged Zeppelin bassist John Paul Jones to produce its latest CD, Waterloo, Tennessee. And Rodrigo y Gabriela, who play the Roxy the next night, cover "Stairway to Heaven" on their eponymous U.S. debut.

That tune resonates with Uncle Earl mandolinist K.C. Groves as well. "I played the flute in high school, and one of my favorite things to do was to play along with 'Stairway to Heaven,'" she says from an airport in Washington, D.C. "That was my first experience with jamming, or playing something by ear."

Uncle Earl first jammed with Jones at a bar after meeting him at a 2004 bluegrass festival. "It's not really that far of a stretch," Groves says. "He's a mandolin player, and he's been into traditional music since before he was in Zeppelin."

Unlike her fellow "g'Earls," Groves didn't get into traditional music until college. "We all came to old-time music from different avenues," says Groves, who heard gospel singing in her grandmother's West Virginia church. "When I started getting into bluegrass and old-time, I guess I had a certain feel for it."

On Waterloo, Tennessee, Jones augmented Uncle Earl's sweet mash of strings and shared vocals on various instruments. "John said somewhere that it was one of the best recording experiences that he's had," Groves says. "We pretty much laughed the whole time."

Sounds like par for the course with Uncle Earl, whose lineup was solidified in 2003 with fiddler Rayna Gellert, banjoist Abigail Washburn and Watertown-based guitarist Kristin Andreassen.

"Our first and foremost goal is to have a good time," says founder Groves, whose group also hits Newburyport's Firehouse Center March 11. "The most frequent comment we get after we play is, 'It looks like you girls are having such a good time up there,' and that's one of the highest compliments we can get."

For Rodrigo Sanchez, his kinetic fusion with fellow guitarist Gabriela Quintero grew from a similar, devil-may-care departure from career ambitions.

"We like to feel the freedom to do whatever we want," Sanchez says from Ixtapa, the seaside resort where he and Quintero moved after their Mexico City metal band Tierra Acida broke up in 1997. They had traded electric guitars for cheap acoustics to play tourist hotels and restaurants, and nobody seemed to notice when they served more Metallica and Slayer covers than bossa nova.

"We didn't really plan to make something happen," he says. "It didn't matter if we were playing in the corner of the bar or on the street. We weren't looking for a manager or record deals anymore."

But the guitar duo broadened their style during subsequent moves to Dublin, Copenhagen and Barcelona, busking on the street and eventually opening for Damien Rice. Their third disc, Rodrigo y Gabriela, produced by John Leckie (Radiohead, My Morning Jacket), came out in this country on Dave Matthews' ATO label.

Sanchez's nimble, Al DiMeola–like leads blend and blur with Quintero's brash strumming and knocking of her guitar body with her fingers, a percussive effect that heightens comparisons to flamenco. But they disassociate themselves from that musical world to the point of including a disclaimer in their CD booklet. "We love flamenco," Sanchez says, "but we try to inform people that we don't perform flamenco just to protect it for flamenco lovers."

As for their novel take on "Stairway to Heaven," it was a lark based not on their days of thrash-metal and classic rock, but seeing jazz guitarist Stanley Jordan tackle it on TV one night. "We just started playing 'Stairway to Heaven' as a joke in a live situation, and people loved it," Sanchez says. "We didn't have a reason not to play it because we come from another kind of background. In Mexico, it isn't overplayed like in the States or the U.K.

"Some people don't know of our background, but they perceive it as rock 'n' roll," he says. "I suppose that makes the difference from being labeled a world-music act, which we're not.

"At the moment, we are playing something different, and people are liking it," says Sanchez, whose duo is now booked at rock clubs and festivals including Bonnaroo (along with Uncle Earl) and Coachella. "If we had drums or bass or whatever, we'd be falling into the same patterns of other bands." iB

Uncle Earl plays March 12 at Club Passim.
Rodrigo y Gabriela play March 13 at the Roxy.
